

The Digestive System

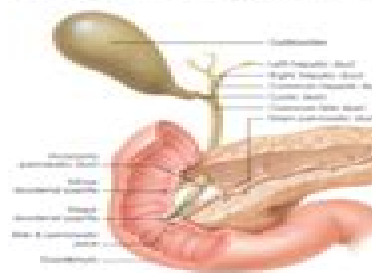

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

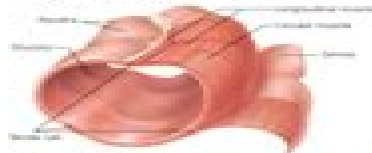

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, chyme moves into the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, where it is mixed with bile secreted by the liver and pancreatic juice secreted by the pancreas. This area is a mixing region on the intestine where the digestive system continues. The gallbladder stores bile secreted by the liver and releases it into the duodenum.

Layers of large intestine

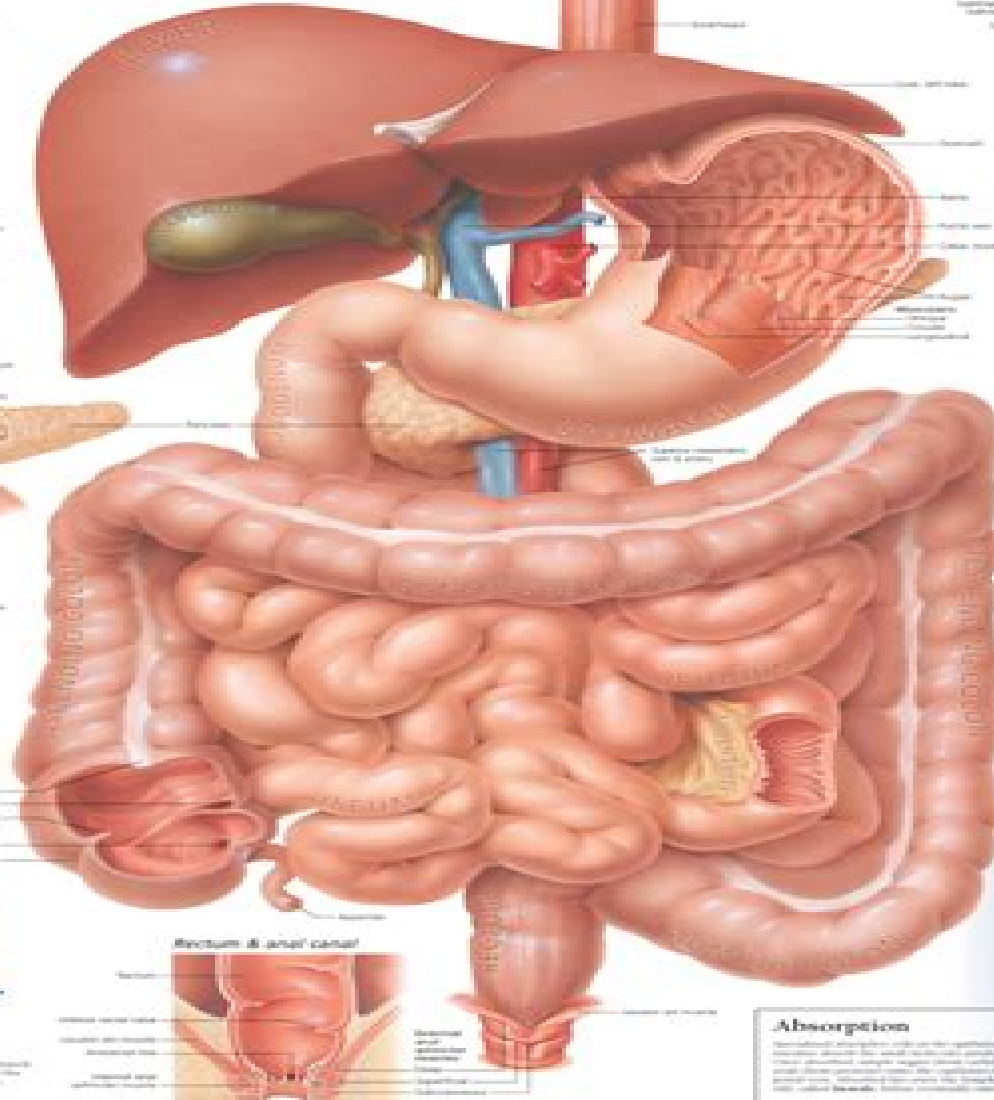

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the colon (ascending, transverse, descending, and sigmoid), and the rectum. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested food, forming feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the wave which, called the peristaltic wave, moves the material forward.

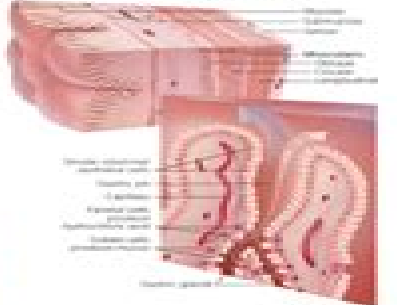

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. Salivary glands secrete saliva, which moistens the food and helps in the breakdown of the food by the action of the salivary glands. The salivary glands are the parotid, sublingual, and submandibular glands. They secrete saliva, which contains the enzyme amylase, which begins the digestion of carbohydrates.

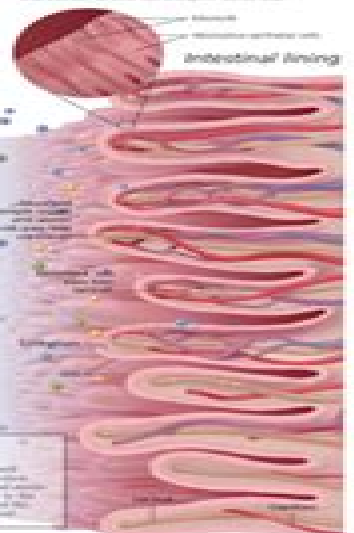

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the upper left part of the abdomen. The stomach has a thick, muscular wall that contracts to mix food with gastric juices, forming a semi-solid mass called chyme. The stomach also has a pyloric sphincter that controls the passage of chyme into the small intestine.

Small intestine

The small intestine consists of three parts: the duodenum, jejunum, and ileum. It is responsible for the digestion of food and the absorption of nutrients. The small intestine is highly coiled and has a large surface area for absorption. The villi, small finger-like projections, increase the surface area for absorption.

Absorption

The process of absorption involves the movement of nutrients from the small intestine into the bloodstream. The villi in the small intestine have a large surface area and a rich blood supply, which allows for the efficient absorption of nutrients. The nutrients are then transported to the rest of the body through the bloodstream.
