

Surfing

Surfers ride the crest of a progressive wave because they are moving faster than the water. If they were stationary, they would be swept away. Waves in the ocean move energy across the surface, but the average motion is not the predominant motion of objects on the surface.

This graph shows the movement of a transverse disturbance. The vertical axis is displacement from the equilibrium position.

Transverse Disturbance

There are four types of wave motion: transverse, longitudinal, surface, and Rayleigh. Transverse, Longitudinal, Surface, Rayleigh.

Longitudinal Disturbance

Disturbance in which the motion is parallel to the direction of wave propagation. Example: Sound waves in air.

Longitudinal

Surface Disturbance

Disturbance in which the motion is both transverse and longitudinal. Example: Water waves. The motion is both transverse and longitudinal. The wave is moving to the right, and the water is moving up and down.

Surface Disturbance

Transverse

Transverse Disturbance

Disturbance in which the motion is perpendicular to the direction of wave propagation. Example: Light waves. The motion is perpendicular to the direction of wave propagation.

We will see that a disturbance in the medium is not the only way to create a wave. Many disturbances are created by the motion of the medium itself. The motion of the medium is called the disturbance. Figure 12.1 shows an object at rest in the water.

When the water is disturbed, the motion of the water is perpendicular to the direction of wave propagation. The motion of the water is called the disturbance. Figure 12.1 shows an object at rest in the water.
