Thought Reform And China's Dangerous Classes Reeducation Resistance And The People's Perspectives:

Thought Reform and China's Dangerous Classes Aminda M. Smith, 2013 Thought reform is arguably China's most controversial social policy. If reeducation's critics and defenders agree on little else, they share the conviction that ideological remolding is inseparable from its Mao era roots. This is the first major English language study to explore one of the most important aspects of those origins: the essential relationship between thought reform and the dangerous classes—the prostitutes, beggars, petty criminals, and other lumpenproletarians that Communists saw as a threat to society and the revolution. Through formerly unavailable classified documents as well as diaries, oral histories, and memoirs, Aminda Smith takes readers inside the early PRC reformatories where the new state endeavored to transform socially marginalized vagrants into socially integrated members of the laboring masses. As sites where the people were literally created, these centers became testing grounds for rapidly changing discourses about the praxis of thought reform as well as the subjects it aimed to produce. Her book explores reformatories as institutions dedicated to molding new socialist citizens and as symbolic spaces through which internees, cadres, and the ordinary masses made sense of what it meant to be a member of the people in the People's Republic of China. She offers convincing new answers to much debated questions about the nature of the crucial decade of the 1950s, especially with respect to the development and future of PRC political culture. Thought Reform and

China's Dangerous Classes Aminda M. Smith, 2013 This book offers the first detailed study of the essential relationship between thought reform and the dangerous classes. The prostitutes, beggars, petty criminals, and other lumpenproletarians the Communists saw as a threat to society and the revolution. Aminda Smith takes readers inside early PRC reformatories where the new state endeavored to transform vagrants into members of the laboring masses. As places where the people were literally created, these centers became testing grounds for rapidly changing ideas and experiments about thought reform and the subjects they produced. Smith The Interrogation Rooms of the Korean War Monica Kim, 2020-11-03 Traditional histories of the Korean War have long focused on violations of the thirty-eighth parallel, the line drawn by American and Soviet officials in 1945 dividing the Korean peninsula. But The Interrogation Rooms of the Korean War presents an entirely new narrative, shifting the perspective from the boundaries of the battlefield to inside the interrogation room. Upending conventional notions of what we think of as geographies of military conflict, Monica Kim demonstrates how the Korean War evolved from a fight over territory to one over human interiority and the individual human subject forging the template for the U.S. wars of intervention that would predominate during the latter half of the twentieth century and beyond. Kim looks at how during the armistice negotiations the United States and their allies proposed a new kind of interrogation room, one in which POWs could exercise their free will and choose which country they would go to after the ceasefire. The global controversy that erupted exposed how interrogation rooms had become a flashpoint for the struggles between the ambitions of empire and the demands for decolonization, as the aim of interrogation was to produce subjects who attested to a nation's
