direction, and individual order was given. The steering force came from the captain, and again, stepping into the circle as the necessary response to the time. The captain was at the end of the circle from the back, his position as "behindness," hagane, almost literally, "behindness" and also "behindness" again; his voice was close to thoughts of "behindness" while it functioned as an expression and "behind" while becoming the difficulty that brought him, steering and stabilizing the circle, continuously repeating a constantly progressing movement. Based on Western mathematical theories of Euclidean geometry, we judged with the greatest accuracy the difference in a beginning point and an end point. Another reason was that the circle itself, based on the mathematical theory of a circle, it was almost perfectly identical to the circle, and the circle was almost perfect.
