The Planet You Inherit Larry L. Rasmussen, 2022-11-29 For the first time ever, love letters consciously written by elders of one geologic epoch to the young of another. Our children's and grandchildren's generation will face a different world, one affected by climate instability, mass uncertainty, and breathtaking extinction. In fact, the next generation will face the reality that human activity is changing the planet from one geological epoch to another. From this vantage point, two generations across two geological epochs face a fundamentally changing planet. Larry Rasmussen writes to his grandchildren. As a grandfather invested in a green earth and climate justice, as well as a scholar of faith-based earth ethics, Rasmussen bridges this gap between generations to write to the future about climate change, global citizenship, democracy, and legacy. In topics ranging from A Viable Way of Life and Democracy to Where We've Come From and Who We Are Now, Rasmussen explores the large questions of justice, meaning, and faith, encouraging us to speak to and look to the future generation and their future world.

What We Inherit Sam Trejo, Daphne O.

Martschenko, 2026-02-03 Debating the use of genomic tools and their societal impact Over the past decade the field of human genetics has produced an extraordinary range of discoveries including the refinement of polygenic scores which use a person's DNA to estimate their likelihood of developing a trait or disease But are these new technologies ready to leave the research lab and be deployed in schools fertility clinics and the wider world In What We Inherit Sam Trejo and Daphne Martschenko offer different perspectives on the societal impact of the rapidly unfolding DNA revolution Trejo a sociologist and expert on the complex ways people's genes influence their life's trajectory believes that new genomic tools if used thoughtfully can improve society Martschenko a bioethicist who specializes in the thorny social issues raised by biomedical advances is more cautious They debate both the risks and the opportunities posed by such new technologies as at home genetic tests and polygenic embryo selection all while engaging in a wide ranging dialogue on ideology biology and social inequality While grappling with these new technologies Trejo and Martschenko remind us that we inherited from our ancestors not only DNA but also wrongheaded ideas about genes Together they caution against two particularly harmful genetic myths that genes determine an individual's future and that race and genetics are inherently connected A polygenic score for example is not a definitive marker for disease And race is a sociopolitical construct not a biological identity Trejo and Martschenko argue that to avoid exacerbating social inequality we need to begin regulating genomic tools sooner rather than later
