Western Structures Meet Native Traditions Cheryl Woolsey Des Jarlais, 2008-08-28 As Western education globalizes its cultural issues become evident contrasting with local learning methods Western ethnocentrism and colonialism have reshaped societies affecting global education Cheryl Woolsey Des Jarlais emphasises how examining these assumptions is crucial as education's moral role resurfaces

Western Structures Meet Native Traditions Cheryl Woolsey Des Jarlais, 2008-10-01 As Western educational practices have become global the cultural aspects and the problems associated with them have become more apparent as they are contrasted with local ways of learning and knowing in the widely diverse societies around the world The Western world has tended to assume that its concepts of progress and development should be universally welcomed especially in countries that are struggling economically Most cultures tend to feel a similar preference for their own world views However the West has had a history of not only ethnocentrism but colonialism in which it has forcibly attempted to reshape the cultures societies politics and economics of conquered territories in its own likeness Though some of the more overt political colonialist practices have been abandoned colonial ways of thinking thinking about thinking and training in how to think are still practiced and these in turn through the education of each nation state's children affect every aspect of economics politics and social development in the global village that our world has become It is critical to examine the basic assumptions of Western education in order to trace their effects on local ways of knowing in many areas which may not share these assumptions and which may be threatened and destroyed by them as global interaction in politics economics and education increases The argument that education is primarily a moral endeavor may have been forced into the background for a time by rationalism and secularism but it is reappearing as an important consideration in education once again The question remains however whose morality should be institutionalized by compulsory educational programs that of the individual the family the professional the elite the state or the nation And if the rules of science are no longer the single authority in identifying truth and reality who decides the authorities we should rely on in the daily operations of a privately owned school in a Native community how these functions have evolved drawbacks and strengths of both Western and Native cultural structures and current challenges in relating to the mixtures of philosophy value systems and socialization expectations of these systems The review of literature exposed a variety of assumptions regarding individualism bureaucratization homogenization universalism meritocracy and rationalization reflected in Western educational structures The study done at Valley Grove Mission School illuminated the assumptions and expectations for educational processes of the surrounding Native community which at times reflected Western values but at other times were very different The Native community in Valley Grove demonstrated a value for democracy individualism and efficient bureaucracies To some degree the Native community under study recognized and appreciated the fairness and order that these elements of structure sought to bring to decision making However the Native community prioritized long term relationships nurtured through visiting and localized events that capitalized on community interaction Self determination was important Native leadership emphasized their role in sharing Native ways of knowing and cultural meaning in order to develop cultural bridges between the Native and modern worlds for Native students Rather than long term professional training programs at distant schools participants in the study deemed short term practical apprentice style trainings in local fields more useful as tools for developing Native leadership in Native communities Cultural Characteristics of
