When it comes to creating applications that can be easily shared across servers Docker is an increasingly popular option. Unfortunately that doesn't mean it is especially easy to use and without a guide it can be easy to get lost without creating much of anything. What sets Docker apart is the way that it parses out information which is done through the use of containers. A container allows developers to ship out applications that already include everything it needs to run properly regardless of the environment it finds itself in. This cuts down on design time and potential headaches significantly while also creating a uniform experience for users of the application no matter what their personal situations may be.
