

Understanding Anorexia Nervosa

Anorexia nervosa is a complex disorder which requires the combined effort of doctors from various disciplines including Psychiatry, Gastroenterology and Nutrition to treat. This book provides a useful knowledge base for the dietitian with anorexia nervosa, and goes step by step through the dietitian's role, giving a detailed history, understanding the pathophysiology and psychology behind the issue, and the interprofessional teamwork required for their recovery using the most up-to-date guidelines and protocols. This book is a manual for people managing clients with anorexia nervosa and some of the guiding principles in the book can be extended to manage clients with other types of eating disorders.

LTC (Dr) Robin Goh is a military Consultant Psychiatrist in the Singapore Armed Forces and a Consultant Psychiatrist in Singapore General Hospital. He has published books on eating disorders and is an active member of numerous psychiatric organisations and voluntary welfare organisations in Singapore.
