

Experiment No. – 10

AIM: To determine the frequency of damped force vibration of a spring mass system.

APPARATUS: Spring mass system, damper, exciter unit, voltage regulator and strip-chart recorder.

THEORY:

The vibration that the system executes under damping system is known as damped vibrations. In general all the physical systems are associated with one or the other type of damping. In certain cases amount of damping may be small in other case large. In damped vibrations there is a reduction in amplitude over every cycle of vibration. This is due to the fact that a certain amount of energy possessed by the vibrating system is always dissipated in overcoming frictional resistances to the motion. The rate at which the amplitude of vibration decays depends upon the type and amount of damping in the system. Damped vibrations can be free vibrations or forced vibrations. Shock absorber is an example of damped vibration. Mainly the following two aspects are important while studying damped free vibrations:

1. The frequency of damped free vibrations and
2. The rate of decay.

PROCEDURE:

1. Connect the exciter to D.C. motor.
2. Start the motor and allow the system to vibrate.
3. Wait for 3 to 5 minutes for the amplitude to build for particular forcing frequency.
4. Adjust the position of strip-chart recorder. Take the record of amplitude Vs time on the strip-chart.
