

My weight loss surgery options

Obesity is one of the leading preventable causes of death in America.

The medical treatment of obesity, including surgery, is very effective, safe and is advancing quickly, with new procedures regularly being developed and approved.

Roux-en-Y gastric bypass

The gastric bypass surgery involves two main steps. First, the upper part of the stomach is stapled to create a small pouch, roughly the size of a golf ball.

After this, a portion of the small intestine is attached to the pouch. "Bypassing" a large portion of the stomach and the upper segment of the small intestine.

Average Excess Weight Loss at 12-18 Months with gastric bypass: 70-84%

Number of patients who experienced resolution of their health condition:

Adjustable gastric band

A laparoscopic gastric band, commonly referred to as a lap-band, is an inflatable silicone device placed around the top portion of the stomach to treat obesity by reducing the amount of food consumed.

In the U.S. market, two types of adjustable gastric bands have been approved by the FDA: Realize® and LAP-BAND®.

Average Excess Weight Loss at 12-18 Months with Lap-Band: 44-67%

Number of patients who experienced resolution of their health condition:

New! Sleeve Gastrectomy

During this surgery, about three-quarters of the stomach is removed. The resulting pouch is the shape of a banana, or a tube, hence the name "sleeve gastrectomy."

This restricts the patient's food intake and results in effective long-term weight loss.

The sleeve gastrectomy is performed by surgeons as a lower-risk alternative to gastric bypass, especially in high-BMI individuals, because it involves less radical surgical changes to the internal organs.

New! Gastric Plication

The gastric plication, also known as the gastric infoldation, is a new weight loss surgery technique and is already showing very encouraging results.

In this procedure, the stomach is folded over and stitched to itself, shrinking it to a small fraction of its original size. This means that it holds less food, which in turn means fewer calories.

Unlike the gastric bypass and sleeve gastrectomy procedures, there is no cutting or stapling of the stomach in the gastric plication.

Unlike the lap-band, there are no adjustments or refills required as part of the post-op follow-up and support regime.

For these reasons, the gastric plication may provide a viable alternative to patients looking for an effective weight loss procedure.
