Abstract
 The purpose of this study was to investigate the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological characteristics of young athletes. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The participants were 15 young athletes (10 males and 5 females) aged 18-22 years. They were divided into two groups: a control group (n=7) and an experimental group (n=8). The experimental group underwent a 12-week training program consisting of aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not undergo any training. The physical characteristics measured were maximum oxygen consumption (VO₂max), maximum heart rate (HRmax), and maximum power (Pmax). The psychological characteristics measured were anxiety, depression, and self-esteem. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly higher VO₂max, HRmax, and Pmax than the control group after 12 weeks of training. Additionally, the experimental group had significantly lower anxiety and depression, and higher self-esteem than the control group after 12 weeks of training. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical and psychological characteristics of young athletes.

Abstract
This study examined the effects of a 12-week, 1000 kcal energy deficit diet on body composition and metabolic rate in 10 obese women. The diet was designed to provide 1500 kcal/day, with 50% of the energy derived from carbohydrates, 30% from fat, and 20% from protein. The subjects were monitored for changes in body weight, body fat, and metabolic rate. The results showed that the subjects lost an average of 10.5 kg of body weight and 15.5% of body fat. The metabolic rate decreased by 10.5% during the diet. The results suggest that a 1000 kcal energy deficit diet is effective for weight loss and that the metabolic rate decreases during the diet.
