

Why Boys Fail— and What We Can Do About It

Patricia D. Hunsader

Boys will be boys, but that doesn't mean they can't learn to read as well as girls.

The story is the same but the players have changed. Instead of being bombarded with frightening statistics on the miseducation of girls in our public schools, we are now being told that boys have fallen so far behind girls that the very fabric of our society is in jeopardy. Is it just hype? The following indicators speak for themselves.

- Boys are given 70 percent of the Ds and Fs on school report cards (Mullrine 2001).
- Boys are 50 percent more likely to be retained than girls (Young & Brozo 2001).
- Boys are three to five times more likely than girls to be labeled as learning disabled (Young & Brozo 2001).
- Boys account for 71 percent of all school suspensions (Dobson 2001).
- Boys report substantially less positive schooling experiences in terms of enjoyment, usefulness of the curriculum, and teacher responsiveness (Rowe 2000).

THE MESSAGE

The author cites research to show that boys' literacy underachievement stems from inherent social and biological differences between girls and boys that tend to favor girls in the classroom. The article urges schools to recognize and consider boys' unique needs and learning styles in teaching literacy.

This is not a recent phenomenon. Research shows that as early as the late 1800s there was concern that boys were not doing as well as girls in school (Young & Brozo 2001). Over the years, a pattern has emerged in which boys' failures are blamed on factors external to the boys themselves, such as curricula, teachers, and teaching methods—all of which supposedly favor girls.

But this is not an adequate rationale for boys' poor school performance. It's time to closely examine boys' unique needs and learning styles, and to consider how these may be affecting boys' school experience, particularly in regard to literacy.

The Trouble with Boys

There are many roots of underachievement by boys, the first of which is their social structure. Boys have a strong desire to be viewed as masculine by their peers, and this takes the form of thinking, talking, and acting in a way that they believe reflects masculinity. Unfortunately, one of the most prevalent beliefs among school-aged boys is that real boys don't work hard in school. Jackson (1998) found that even academically successful boys felt the need to hide their commitment to academic work in order to be accepted by their peers.

The second root of the problem is biological. According to studies by the University of Pennsylvania's Brain Behavior Laboratory, girls' brains are more finely developed, giving them superior verbal skills (Mullrine 2001). Unfortunately, the very things at which the male brain excels—gross motor skills, visual and spatial skills, and exuberance—are qualities that are not very useful in the classroom, where teaching and management tend to fit the temperament, learning styles, and natural

Why Boys Fail Hebei Rural Schools Based On Researchchinese Edition:

Two Decades of Basic Education in Rural China Lu Wang, Keith Lewin, 2016-09-14 This book examines how educational change has progressed in three contrasting areas spread across China since 1990 exploring key issues concerning rural education in poor rich and minority areas Of the three areas covered in this book the first is a rich one near Beijing the second is in the northwest in Shanxi on the Loess plateau and the third is in Sichuan on the high plateau leading to Tibet Central issues include the impact of large scale demographic change and migration with increasing numbers of left behind children in sending areas and large increases in the numbers of inbound migrants in receiving areas dramatic increases in the boarding of children in rural areas as a result of rural school merge changing patterns of teacher deployment recentralization of responsibilities for school financing and growing concerns regarding horizontal and vertical inequalities in both access and participation Chinese Research Perspectives on Educational Development, Volume 5 Dongping Yang, Min Yang, Shengli Huang, 2021-01-25 This selected translation of Blue Book of Chinese Education 2016 reviews China's education development in 2015 Chapter one offers an overview Chapters two to four examine rural education in China including the education of the left behind children compulsory education in rural areas and the working condition of rural teachers Chapters five to eleven cover educational services education reform non governmental education training program for teachers teaching of traditional Chinese culture the basic values of high school students and school bullying The last three chapters are survey reports of compulsory education development in Chinese cities math and science education for ethnic minority populations and education authorities attitudes toward reform The seven appendices provide important supplementary materials Guanxi Exclusion in Rural China Ailei Xie, 2017-01-26 This dissertation Guanxi Exclusion in Rural China Parental Involvement and Students College Access by Ailei Xie was obtained from The University of Hong Kong Pokfulam Hong Kong and is being sold pursuant to Creative Commons Attribution 3.0 Hong Kong License The content of this dissertation has not been altered in any way We have altered the formatting in order to facilitate the ease of printing and reading of the dissertation All rights not granted by the above license are retained by the author Abstract This study examines the differential patterns of access to higher education of students from rural areas in transition from a planned to a market economy In respect to college access the research argues that market reforms have reproduced the advantages for students from the cadre's and the professional's families while simultaneously creating new opportunities for the children of the new arising economic elite Yet it has performed less for traditional peasant families whose children still fail to gain access to college in proportions higher than the size of the population Based on the literature this research places a special emphasis on how economic and cultural resources become the main influence on rural students college access The process dimension how families from different social backgrounds within rural society involve themselves in the schooling of their children and how this contributes to inequality of college access within rural society are investigated This research unpacks

this process by examining the school involvement experiences of parents in Zong a county located in the province of Anhui Parental involvement is conceptualized in terms of how economic and cultural resources are converted to social capital as part of family strategies within the increasingly stratified social context of rural China The research identifies the consequences of activating different types of social networks within family and community and also between family and school to facilitate this process by gaining advantages in access to college Household interviews and field notes were used as the main methods of data collection with a range of parents and teachers involved in this ethnographic study The data analysis suggests that state schools and teachers provide few formal and routine channels for rural parents to become involved in schooling This raises the importance of family strategic initiatives to employ interpersonal social networks guanxi within family community and between school and family Parents from cadres and professional backgrounds are capable of maintaining these social networks that are useful for their children s chances of entering higher education Their counterparts from the new economic elites backgrounds have developed the means to capitalize upon their families economic and cultural resources by converting them into social capital that creates advantages in college access for their children Peasants however rely heavily on teachers and relatives in education and are substantially marginalized from those important interpersonal social networks of capital conversion Although this research found the structure constrains interpersonal social network of peasant families it also highlights the agency of parents from different families For example in some cases it found that peasants actively use their kinships to create chances for school involvement to potentially improve the chances of their children s college access This research is one of the first empirical studies to inquire about the mechanism of capital conversion in affecting higher education opportunities in the post socialist era which will help to re evaluate the influence of market reforms over rural education system in China DOI 10 5353 th_b4832991 Subjects Universities and colleges China Admission Rural Family Strategies, Guanxi, and School Success in Rural China Ailei Xie, 2016-04-14 Research in school success in contemporary China has argued that market reforms have reproduced the advantages for children from the cadre and the professional families while simultaneously creating new opportunities for children of the new arising economic elites However it has performed less for traditional peasant families This book places a special emphasis on how rural parents from different social backgrounds use guanxi interpersonal social networks to maintain the interconnectedness between their families and schools to create advantages for their children in school success It investigates by an ethnographic study in a rural county in middle China how families from different social backgrounds within rural society get involved in the schooling of their children and how this contributes to different patterns of school success The book argues that schools provide few formal and routine channels for rural parents to become involved in their children s schooling This raises the importance of family strategic initiatives to employ guanxi in the creation of advantages for their children s school success It concludes with discussions about guanxi as an important mechanism for social exclusion in post socialist China Chapters include Family Strategies Parental Involvement and School Success The Roles of Parents Voices of Parents in Zong Regarding School Involvement Policy Discourses Missing the Link between Family and School Peasants Family and Kinship The Blurring Division between Home and School This concise and comprehensive book is a qualitative study that will appeal to researchers and advance students in Chinese education and society Rural Education in China's Social Transition Peggy A. Kong,Emily Hannum,Gerard A. Postiglione,2020-12 In the first decade of the twenty first century the People s Republic of China experienced dramatic growth and expansion that altered the educational environment of children Rapid economic development increased prosperity and educational opportunities for children expanded in a wealthier society Yet a by product of rising wealth was rising inequality While the children of the emerging urban middle and elite classes enjoyed new prosperity the children of hte persistently poor in rural communities continued to experience challenges such as food insecurity illness hardships of family separation and migrant life on the margins of the cities This time period saw a large resource gap emerge between the home conditions of poor rural children compared with those of their wealthier urban counterparts This book highlights the complexities China has experienced in seeking to extend full educational access to rural children including rural to urban migrant and ethnic minority children during a momentous period in China Chapters delve into the experiences perceptions strategies and diffi culties of rural origin children and their families in the school system and lay bare the challenges of policy initiatives designed to support rural education We hope the experiences detailed here will be of interest to students and scholars of rural educational policy and practice in China and worldwide New Pathways of Rural Education in China Jialing Han,2024-03-31 This book summarizes and explores the development model and path of rural education in China while also describing how small scale schools can replicate this low cost local experience As the nerve endings of Chinese education system rural small scale schools have unique important values in guaranteeing equity in education and serving the compulsory education in rural areas This book presents ten vivid stories of the transforming path of rural small scale schools in China It shows how the rural small scale schools acted according to circumstances to enhance education quality how they broke through the difficult situation and improved and how they achieved the status of small and beautiful and small and good It explores a new path for rural education reform and aims to provide some inspirations on rural and urban education development
