

The Unheard Voices: Community Organizations and Service-Learning

Elizabeth Tryon, Randy Stoecker

Abstract

This article reports the findings of in-depth interviews with sixty-seven community organization representatives about their experience with service-learners. We found that partnerships have much room for improvement in several key areas: communication and relationship-building, managing and evaluation of students, and cultural competency, as well as the challenge of short-term service-learning.

Introduction

Service-learning has become an institutionalized practice in higher education. A lot of institutional hype accompanies service-learning, and a lot of research promotes its positive impact on student grades, attitudes, and sensitivities (Lansverk 2004; Myers-Lipton 1998; Krain and Nurse 2004). There are also claims that service-learning positively impacts host communities (Cruz and Giles 2000) but much less research to back up those claims. In fact, from the community perspective, there has been growing dissatisfaction with service-learning since the late 1990s. In the worst cases, analysts saw poor communities exploited as free sources of student education (Eby 1998). Others worried that the "charity" model of service-learning reinforced negative stereotypes and students' perceptions of poor communities as helpless (Kahne and Westheimer 1996; Marullo and Edwards 2000; Ward and Wolf-Wendel 2000). But this research doesn't assess the impact of those students on communities.

There are only a handful of studies that look at community impact and community perceptions of service-learning (Cruz and Giles 2000), and these studies only minimally reflect community definitions of what that impact should be. The few studies available conclude that community organizations are relatively satisfied with the service that they receive (Vernon and Ward 1999; Ferrari and Worrall 2000; Birdsall 2005). For the most part, however, the research on satisfaction has remained at a relatively superficial level, using Likert-scale questionnaires or focus groups, with the notable exception of Sandy and Holland (2006).

The Unheard Voices Community Organizations And Service Learning:

The Unheard Voices Randy Stoecker, Elizabeth A. Tryon, 2009-08-21 Service learning has become an institutionalized practice in higher education. Students are sent out to disadvantaged communities to tutor, feed and help organize communities. But while the students gain from their experiences, the contributors to The Unheard Voices ask: Does the community? This volume explores the impact of service learning on a community and considers the unequal relationship between the community and the academy. Using eye-opening interviews with community organization staff members, The Unheard Voices challenges assumptions about the effectiveness of service learning. Chapters offer strong critiques of service learning practices from the lack of adequate training and supervision to problems of communication and issues of diversity. The book's conclusion offers ways to improve service learning so that future endeavors can be better at meeting the needs of the communities and the students who work in them.

CD Utilizing practical examples from diverse contexts across five continents, it looks at how communities are empowering themselves and bringing about systemic change. Liberating Service Learning and the Rest of Higher Education: Civic Engagement Randy Stoecker, 2016-05-23 This book questions the prioritization and theoretical philosophical underpinnings of the core concepts of service learning: 1. learning, 2. service, 3. community, and 4. change. By liberating service learning, the author suggests reversing the prioritization of the concepts, starting with change, then community, then service, and then learning. In doing so, the author clarifies the benefits and purpose.
