

Working Paper on Astrological Physiognomy: History and Sources

© Regulus Astrology LLC, all rights reserved.

Initial Paper posted April 20, 2010

Revised September 6, 2011

- Included Francis Galton's composite facial portraiture studies and added William Salmon's sign subdivisions.

Revised November 6, 2011

- Added Bonatti's physiognomy definitions from Book of Astronomy, Treatise 3.

Objective

Beginning with a literature review, this paper highlights the historical development of astrological physiognomy from the Greco-Roman period to the present day. Included in the literature review are the principal texts in the field of non-astrological physiognomy beginning with the pseudo-Aristotelian Physiognomica (3rd Cent BCE). The paper concludes with a summary of research issues which need further clarification.

Special Note

By definition a working paper represents conclusions which are tentative in nature. Additional sources will be added as they become available and as time permits. At present, the following astrological authors have yet to be surveyed: Scott, Cardano, Morin, Giurico, and Saunders (Physiognomie, Chiromanie, Menoposopie (1671)). There are also a number of untranslated Arabic physiognomy texts which I include in the literature review for completeness. Any assistance from readers interested in reviewing physiognomy models by any of these authors is welcomed.
