- conduct longitudinal research: test and test's
- experimental studies
- the other approach the more frequently conducted are non-experimental study, where the groups are not randomly assigned
- the other approach the other "correlation does not imply causation" and what you find means
- know that because a correlation is not a causal relationship and sometimes it's stronger relationship is not true, observational research, and statistically it's hard to know why one event is representative of an other one for studies
