People have been practicing disinfection and sterilization unknowingly since time immemorial though the existence of microorganisms was unknown. The complete destruction or removal of all living microorganisms or their spores by any physical, chemical, or mechanical means is called sterilization. Sterilization can be accomplished by using heat, filtration, and gases. A satisfactory sterilization process is designed to ensure a high probability of achieving sterility. This author in the seventh chapter, Sterilization, has described the basic principles of sterilization factors influencing the effectiveness of antimicrobial agents, various physical and chemical agents, and other agents of sterilization. The strain development is a primary step in the process of fermentation or growth studies carried out in any fermentation process or microbiological research which enables to increase the population of microorganisms from stock culture to obtain cells in an active and exponential growth phase. The author in the eighth chapter, Strain development and improvement, has described the historical perspective of fermentation with reference to brewing and bakers yeast development of inoculum for bacteria and fungi. He has described the conventional Metagenomics, genetic engineering, and mutation selection and latest strain improvement methods such as the genomic transcriptome, proteomic, and metabolome analysis. Microbial culture preservation aims at maintaining a microbial strain alive uncontaminated without variation or mutation. The author in the ninth chapter, Culture Preservation, describes the relevance of various culture preservation techniques with the objective of maintaining live strains uncontaminated and to prevent change in their characteristics.
