Cathy Fiorina is one of the most celebrated women in the world. She strived tactically to achieve her business and political objectives. Notably, she vied for Californian Senate seat with a Republican ticket in 2009. Additionally, she was the CEO of Hewlett-Packard (1999-2005), AT&T, and HP. She has also been a member of the Board of Directors governing institutions.

Academically, she commenced her studies as a law student in UCLA; however, she dropped out (as a key strategy) to serve as a receptionist for 6 months at Marcus & Millichap (a real-estate corporation). Notably, she began to explore viable market opportunities.

"Her determination earned her a presidential title" (Anders 45). In this context, she was considered the president of Hewlett-Packard Technological Company. Fiorina's success rested mainly on her ambitions, determination, patience, well-structured strategies, passion, and discipline in the realms of entrepreneurship. This is a critical provision when considered comprehensively.

Being an ambitious business lady, Fiorina sacrificed a lot of things to achieve her dreams. This incorporated her educational career among other social provisions. At a given point in her career, she dropped out to use the remaining part of her studies to set up her businesses (Fiorina, 33).

However, this required a lot of capital, which she could not afford as at then. She decided to seek employment in one of the established business corporations named AT&T where she served as a receptionist. Later, due to her hard work and experience, she was promoted to assume the roles of a sales representative.

Strategically, Fiorina decided to further her studies in philosophy and medieval history. She jumped from one job to another (HP, AT&T, Hewlett-Packard, Cybertrust, and Lucent). This equipped her with a lot of leadership and management experiences, which she later used to manage the previously mentioned organizations. Another factor that might have led to Fiorina's success was the media.
