The Facial Hair Handbook Jack Passion,2009-05 Reigning world champion of beards Jack Passion takes the reader through the lifecycle of growing grooming getting rid of facial hair The decision to grow how to style and even what to say to women who don t like a beard are all topics covered in the most definitive guide to facial hair ever written Beard Care Maria Garrets, Let s delve a bit deeper into each component of the anatomy of a beard 1 Sideburns These are the strips of hair that grow down from the temples towards the jawline Sideburns can vary in length and thickness depending on personal preference and style 2 Cheeks The cheek area refers to the space between the sideburns and the jawline Some men prefer to keep this area clean shaven for a more defined look while others allow hair to grow here blending it into the rest of the beard 3 Jawline The jawline is the lower edge of the beard that runs along the underside of the jaw It plays a crucial role in defining the shape of the beard Many beard styles such as the classic full beard or the goatee are distinguished by how the hair along the jawline is shaped 4 Chin The area below the lower lip and extending towards the neck is known as the chin This area often dictates the overall shape and length of the beard Some styles like the chin strap or soul patch focus specifically on this region 5 Mustache The mustache refers to the hair that grows above the upper lip It can be styled in various ways such as trimming it short letting it grow long or shaping it into distinct forms like the handlebar mustache or the pencil thin mustache 6 Neckline The neckline is the lower boundary of the beard where the facial hair meets the neck This area is crucial for maintaining a neat appearance The neckline can be defined in different ways such as a natural line where the hair stops growing densely or a more defined line that s trimmed to a specific shape Each of these components contributes to the overall appearance of a beard and grooming techniques can vary widely depending on individual preferences and the desired style
