Zero Tolerance Or Community Tolerance Managing Crime In High Crime Areas:

Zero Tolerance or Community Tolerance? Sandra Walklate, Karen Evans, 2019-01-15 First published in 1999 this volume presents arguments which compare two inner city wards of Salford and look to introduce such a subtlety to the understanding of the management of crime in high crime communities and derive from a longitudinal research study which took place over a two and a half year period Between 1994 and 1996 researchers based at the University of Salford and the University of Keele embarked on research into two similarly structured neighbourhoods within the city of Salford in the North of England This research set out to situate an understanding of the risk from and fear of crime in a comparative urban context to uncover how people who live work and go to school in designated high crime areas manage their routine daily lives and construct their own responses to risk of and fear of crime The authors go on to highlight the similarities between these wards and other wards with which they have a clear resonance across Britain Imagining The Victim Of Crime Walklate, Sandra, 2006-10-01 Concern for the victims of crime first emerged with the formation of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in 1964 This has continued with the increase in crime rates since the 1970s and 1980s and in the aftermath of a number of high profile trials In this book Sandra Walklate offers an introduction to the key theoretical methodological and substantive issues in victimology and criminal victimization She situates the contemporary preoccupation with criminal victimization within the broader social and cultural changes of the last twenty five years Written in the context of post September 11 and alongside the events in Madrid of 2004 and London in July 2005 it questions who can be considered a victim of crime and what the response to such victimization might look like BOOK JACKET Good Practice in Working with Victims of Violence Hazel Kemshall, Jacki Pritchard, 2000 Drawing on the experiences of practitioners from a range of backgrounds this study of real or threatened physical violence and its consequences is based upon personal accounts of people who have been subjected to violence The Oxford Handbook of Environmental Criminology Gerben J.N. Bruinsma, Shane D. Johnson, 2018-02-08 The study of how the environment local geography and physical locations influence crime has a long history that stretches across many research traditions These include the neighborhood effects approach developed in the 1920s the criminology of place and a newer approach that attends to the perception of crime in communities Aided by new technologies and improved data reporting in recent decades research in environmental criminology has developed rapidly within each of these approaches Yet research in the subfield remains fragmented and competing theories are rarely examined together The Oxford Handbook of Environmental Criminology takes a unique approach and synthesizes the contributions of existing methods to better integrate the subfield as a whole Gerben J N Bruinsma and Shane D Johnson have assembled a cast of top scholars to provide an in depth source for understanding how and why physical setting can influence the emergence of crime affect the environment and impact individual or group behavior The contributors address how changes in the environment global connectivity and technology provide more criminal opportunities and new ways of committing old crimes They also explore how crimes committed in countries with distinct cultural practices like China and West Africa might lead to different spatial patterns of crime This is a state of the art compendium on environmental criminology that reflects the diverse research and theory developed across the western world
