Western Islamic Architecture John D. Hoag, 1963 Until they began their conquests which rapidly engulfed half of the known world the Arabs were totally innocent of any architectural tradition Yet from the middle of the seventh century for a period of nearly eight hundred years the Muslims developed an architectural identity quite outside the influence of the Christian West an identity related to Western forms only tangentially through the principles of late Roman and Hellenic styles as they were modified in Early Byzantine and Near Eastern designs Nevertheless Islamic architecture is as God centered as the soaring structures of Gothic Europe Its inventiveness was concentrated around two major programs the mosque and the palace which although frequently borrowing forms from each other expressed fundamentally contradictory concepts The first emphasized the infinite variety and oneness of God the second glorified a human individual In the case of palaces however architecture also emphasized the ruler as an intermediary between man and God Furthermore his gardens developed into symbolic portrayals of Paradise thus providing a strong religious implication which also affected lesser domestic architecture In line with its turbulent political history and its far flung conquests the Islamic world adopted a variety of architectural styles the development of new designs or modifications of older ones depending on the degree of isolation from other Islamic areas In Spain and North Africa the intricate and ethereal ornamentation led to the creation of an illusionistic and fantastic structure in Granada even the structure became ornament and a building seemed to become an airy substance hovering over earth rather than resting upon it In contrast the clear concise almost austere forms of Egypt developed an architecture that was patently logical expansive and virile while in Turkey the magnificent Ottoman mosques both influenced by and reacting against the earlier Seljuk style produced a monumentality integrated to an extent not even attempted by other Islamic variant styles In introducing the major monuments of the Western Islamic world Mr Hoag points out their relationships to each other and to the political and social climate which produced and developed one of the most majestic architectures in the history of civilization Book Jacket An Illustrated History of Islamic Architecture Moya Carey, 2012 An introduction to the architectural wonders of Islam from mosques to palaces in 250 magnificent pictures Islamic Palace Architecture in the Western Mediterranean Felix Arnold, 2017-02-14 Palaces like the Aljafer a and the Alhambra rank among the highest achievements of the Islamic world In recent years archaeological work at Cordoba Kairouan and many other sites has vastly increased our knowledge about the origin and development of Islamic palatial architecture particularly in the Western Mediterranean region This book offers a comprehensive and up to date overview of Islamic palace architecture in Spain Morocco Algeria Tunisia and southern Italy The author who has himself conducted archaeological field work at several prominent sites presents all Islamic palaces known in the region in ground plans sections and individual descriptions The book traces the evolution of Islamic palace architecture in the region from the 8th to the 19th century and places them within the context of the history of Islamic culture Palace architecture is a unique source of cultural history offering insights into the way space was conceived and the way rulers used architecture to legitimize their power The book discusses such topics as the influence of the architecture of the Middle East on the Islamic palaces of the western Mediterranean region the role of Greek logic and scientific progress on the design of palaces the impact of Islamic palaces on Norman and Gothic architecture and the role of Sufism on the palatial architecture of the late medieval period The Timeline History of Islamic Art and Architecture

Islamic Architecture in South Asia Ahmad Nabi Khan, 2003 Muslim contribution towards evolving and perpetuating a distinctive style of architecture in the South Asian subcontinent has been epoch making Different and divergent from its local counterpart the style was essentially a synthesized assimilation of foreign as well as local elements which together created marvels both of religious and secular buildings. While foreign elements were introduced by the Arabs, Persians, Turks, and the Central Asians, local characteristics were borrowed from the Hindu, Jain, temples and Buddhist monastic establishments. The Muslims built their habitats according to the dictates of their faith, their taste and resources, and in accordance with the prevailing climatic conditions, availability of materials, and proficiency of technical know-how. During the last hundred years, several art and architectural historians have described and evaluated the birth, adolescence, and maturity of these styles. However, a cumulative of the exploration and excavation of several archaeological sites and surveys of hitherto unknown or little known standing monuments was yet to be attempted. The present book gives a resume of these efforts and researches, putting it in chronological perspective and geographical sequence. The material researched and illustrated by the architectural historians and published in the annual reports, memoirs, and journals of the old Archaeological Survey of India and the Pakistan Department of Archaeology has been generously and extensively adapted and included in the text. For the first time, after analytical treatment, it has been presented in order to give a comprehensive picture of Islamic architecture in South Asia up to the time of the decline and extinction of the grand Moghul Empire.
