A Manual of English Prose Literature Biographical and Critical Designed Mainly to Show Characteristics of Style William Minto, 1872 A Manual of English Prose Literature William Minto, 1881 A Manual of English Prose Literature Biographical and Critical Minto, 1881 A Morphosyntactic Investigation of Functional Categories in English and Izon Odingowei Kwokwo, 2016-02-04 Doctoral Thesis Dissertation from the year 2012 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies Linguistics University of Ibadan language English abstract Existing studies on Izon language have concentrated on unilingual application of traditional grammar in constructing well formed sentences thereby neglecting critical descriptions of the ways morphosyntactic features ensure the derivation of convergent structures A contrastive examination of English a standard for universal grammar analysis and Izon languages can properly characterise these syntactically significant features This work therefore investigates the morphosyntactic features in English and Izon

languages with a view to identifying and describing the morphosyntactic features that make the structures of the two languages converge. The study adopts Chomsky's Minimalist Program which emphasises checking of morphological features. The research is based on Standard English and the Kolokuma dialect of Izon used in education and the media and is mutually intelligible with other dialects. Data on English were collected from various books on English grammar and those on Izon were collected from native speakers in Kolokuma and Opokuma clans in Bayelsa State where the dialect is spoken and complemented with the researcher's native speaker's introspective data. Since the study is competence based, completely grammatical structures from each language were used for the analysis. Clausal and phrasal syntactic structures of English and Izon languages were comparatively analysed based on the feature checking processes of the Minimalist Program to identify shared and idiosyncratic features. Universal features common to both languages include phrases, clauses, syntactic heads, and wh-fronting. However, English and Izon opt for different head parameters. Heads in English precede their complements while heads in Izon follow their complements. Although Nominative Case licensing occurs in Spec-head structures in both languages, Accusative Case is licensed in head-complement relationship in English and complement-head structure in Izon. Both English and Izon permit wh-fronting at Spec-CP but Izon wh-expressions obligatorily co-occur with focus particles ki or ko which are functional elements that licence wh-elements. Whereas English constructs relative clauses with overt and interpretable complementizers such as who or which precede their complement clauses, Izon constructs relative clauses without overt interpretable wh-expressions except an overt amee that which follows its complement clause. The English Quarterly, 1990. A Manual of English Prose Literature, Biographical and Critical, Etc William Minto, 1872.

Possibilities, Challenges, and Changes in English Teacher Education Today Heidi L. Hallman, Kristen Pastore-Capuana, Donna L. Pasternak, 2019-05-24. This book focuses on English teacher educators' experiences concerning professionalization and teacher identity. The term professionalization itself can be problematized (Popkewitz, 1994) as it connotes adherence to realities to professional norms that are based within particular histories. Yet teacher educators must confront how to mentor prospective teachers into the field and how changes to the field manifest changes to what it means to be a professional. In research about changes in English teacher education over the past twenty years, Pasternak, Caughlan, Hallman, Renzi, and Rush (2017) presented five distinct foci of ELA programs that have evolved: 1) changes to field experiences within teacher education programs; 2) altered conceptions of teaching literature and literacy within the context of ELA; 3) increased adherence to standardization; 4) changing demographics of students in K-12 classrooms; and 5) increased expectations for use of technology within ELA. These foci impact how professionals in ELA are viewed both from inside and outside the profession and how they navigate these tensions in teacher education programs to define what it means to identify as an English teacher. Throughout the book, chapter authors articulate dilemmas that focus around professionalization and teacher identity, questioning what it means to be an English teacher today. While some chapters suggest methods for increased awareness of tensions within practice other chapters approach professionalization and teacher identity by asking what the limits of methods classes and teacher education might be in preparing ELA teachers and supporting them to remain in the profession Today s political environment devalues teachers and teaching a situation that has critics deriding the educational standards at institutes of higher education while concurrently lauding alternative programs that do not have to adhere to the same rigorous teacher certification requirements English teacher educators are now being asked to design programs soften requirements and recruit and mentor teacher candidates to a profession that in the past certified more new English teachers than it could employ The chapters in this book explore what it means to educate and be an English teacher educator under these conditions
