

- Children and young people respond well to new technologies and conversation can be helped along by using computer games and programs, the internet, mobile phone texting and so on.
- Thought should go into the timing of meetings with children, for example, avoiding clashes with activities that they have planned or favourite TV programmes. Children and young people have spoken frequently about social workers being late, or not turning up at all, and the negative impact this has on establishing a trusting relationship.
- Be alert to use of language – keep it simple, and take time to learn about modern slang and phrases.

Building up individual and team resources

Every practitioner needs skill, confidence and easy access to materials to ensure that the dialogue they have with children and young people is a meaningful one.

Skills

The skills required have recently been drawn up by a consortium of government and voluntary sector agencies and published as the Common Core of Skills and Knowledge for the Children's Workforce (DfES 2005).

The skills required include those of:

- active listening
- empathising with the point of view of children and young people
- developing trusting relationships with children and young people
- understanding non-verbal communication (body language and tone)
- building a rapport
- explaining, summarising and providing information
- giving feedback in a clear way
- understanding and explaining the boundaries of confidentiality.

Toolkit

It is useful to have a bag containing a few toys, coloured pencils, pens, coloured paper, flash cards, felt tips, children's books, play dough, magazines, make-up and so on. Worksheets, happy/sad faces and similar tools to encourage talk about feelings are also useful. If possible, a camera and laptop are also good resources to have readily available.

It may be that there are not the resources for every individual to have a full toolkit but, as a minimum for good practice, these materials should be available for every team.

Say it Your Own Way, a comprehensive guide with associated materials (up to 70 worksheets) published by Barnardo's (2006), brings together a number of tools and techniques to use in undertaking assessments.
