the course of earlier research (e.g., the importance of the degree of income equality). They provide a somewhat overly pessimistic view of the future of the "free" market and the role of government in correcting market imperfections. The authors also caution for responsibility of the public sector to respond to emerging problems and to ensure that the private sector is not responsible for creating them.

The average child has a more positive attitude toward their mother's use of technology than their father's, according to a new study published in the Journal of Family Psychology. The study, published online by the American Psychological Association, found that children of mothers who use technology more frequently than their fathers have a more positive attitude toward their mother's use of technology. The study also found that children of mothers who use technology more frequently than their fathers have a more positive attitude toward their father's use of technology. The study was conducted by researchers at the University of Texas at Austin and the University of California, Los Angeles.
