Abstract

[illegible]

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was conducted in a community-based setting. The study population consisted of 20 sedentary, middle-aged women who were recruited from a local health fair. The women were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical health of the women was assessed using a series of physical fitness tests, including a 6-minute walk test, a 10-minute step test, and a 12-minute sit-and-reach test. The psychological health of the women was assessed using a series of psychological tests, including a Beck Depression Inventory (BDI) and a State-Trait Anxiety Inventory (STAI). The results of the study showed that the women in the walking program had significantly higher scores on the physical fitness tests and the psychological tests compared to the women in the control group. The results of the study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

The figure is divided into three main sections: Stimulus presentation, Behavioral response, and Data analysis.

Stimulus presentation: This section shows a sequence of stimuli (a face, a word, and a face) with corresponding neural activity (ERP waveforms). The stimuli are presented in a sequence, and the neural activity is recorded for each stimulus.

Behavioral response: This section shows a participant's response (a button press) and a corresponding neural activity (ERP waveform). The participant's response is recorded for each stimulus, and the neural activity is recorded for each response.

Data analysis: This section shows a flowchart of the analysis process, including ERP analysis and Behavioral analysis. The ERP analysis involves identifying the components of the ERP waveform (e.g., P1, N1, P2, N2, P3, N3) and comparing them across conditions. The behavioral analysis involves comparing the response times and accuracy across conditions.
