

The Nervous System

The nervous system

The nervous system is composed of two integrated subdivisions: an extensive peripheral nervous system, which extends throughout the body, and a central nervous system, which is located in the head and spine.

The CNS includes the brain and spinal cord, which are covered by protective meninges called the meninges. The brain is the central control center of the nervous system. It is the brain that interprets sensory information and initiates responses. The spinal cord is the main communication pathway between the brain and the rest of the body. It carries out the instructions from the brain to the muscles and organs.

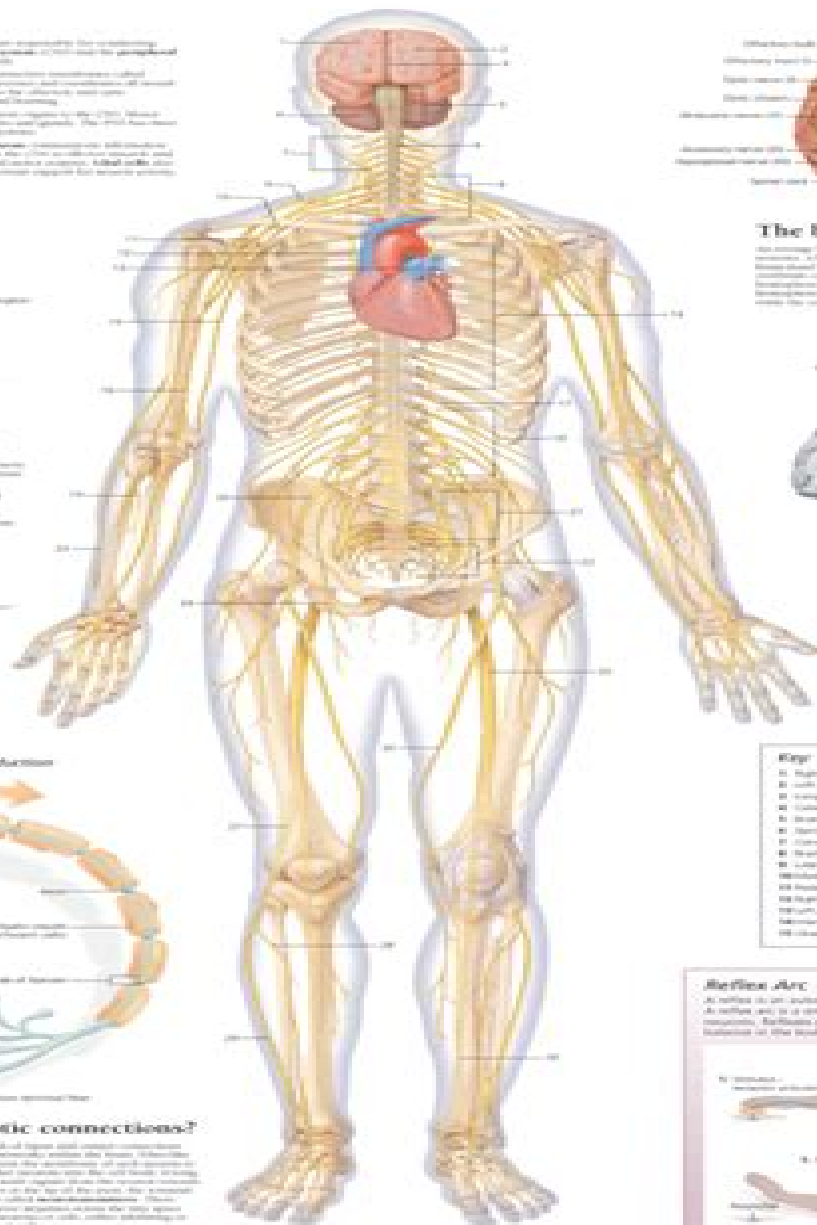

The peripheral nervous system (PNS) consists of all the nerves and nerve fibers that are not part of the CNS. It includes the nerves that branch out from the brain and spinal cord to the rest of the body. The PNS is responsible for carrying sensory information from the body back to the brain and for carrying motor commands from the brain to the muscles and organs.

Spinal cord

The spinal cord and nerves

The spinal cord is the part of the central nervous system that is located in the spine. It is the main communication pathway between the brain and the rest of the body. The spinal cord is composed of a central part called the spinal cord and a peripheral part called the spinal nerves. The spinal cord is responsible for carrying sensory information from the body back to the brain and for carrying motor commands from the brain to the muscles and organs.

Structure of motor neurons

Motor neurons are responsible for carrying out the body's commands. They are composed of a cell body (soma) and a long process called an axon. The cell body contains the nucleus and other organelles. The axon is covered by a myelin sheath, which is made up of myelin cells. The myelin sheath is responsible for insulating the axon and allowing it to conduct electrical impulses.

Synaptic knob or axon terminal of presynaptic neuron

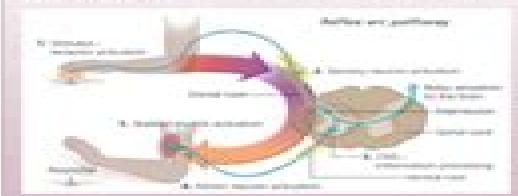

What are synaptic connections?

Synaptic connections are the points where two neurons meet and communicate. They are called synapses. There are two main types of synapses: chemical synapses and electrical synapses. Chemical synapses are the most common type of synapse. They involve the release of chemical messengers called neurotransmitters, which bind to receptors on the target cell and cause it to fire. Electrical synapses are less common. They involve direct contact between the two cells, allowing electrical impulses to pass directly from one cell to the other.

Reflex Arc

A reflex is an automatic, involuntary response to internal or external stimuli. A reflex arc is a simple and specific type of neural pathway that controls a reflex. It involves the following steps: 1. Stimulus, 2. Receptor, 3. Afferent pathway, 4. Integration center, 5. Efferent pathway, 6. Effector, and 7. Response.
