Assessing and Treating Youth Exposed to Traumatic Stress Victor G. Carrión, M.D., 2018-10-16 Assessing and Treating Youth Exposed to Traumatic Stress is a cogent caring and comprehensive response to the reality that many children live lives of constant threat fear and confusion while lacking opportunities for positive social interactions stimulation and empowerment Although the book is written for mental health clinicians teachers and others who support traumatized youth will find this book an essential addition to their professional libraries Identifying these children is the first step and the importance of careful assessment through use of the clinical interview in both individual and group settings is emphasized In addition the population with posttraumatic stress disorder

PTSD is highly diverse in terms of presentation and target symptoms and the book explores differences in type duration and accumulation of trauma age of insult stress vulnerability family history and other individual factors Nearly a dozen of treatment options are presented in the book and they are distinguished by setting such as clinic home or school and modality such as psychotherapy or pharmacology Attention is also paid to preventive measures most of which are school or group based to increase resiliency where possible Assessing and Treating Victims of Violence John Briere,1994 Recent research has shown that a significant proportion of North American children are sexually physically or psychologically abused each year and that the number of reports of adult rape spousal abuse and physical assault by strangers continues to grow Beyond the epidemiology of societal violence per se is its impact on the mental health of those who live in our culture Scientists and clinicians are beginning to trace the genesis of a number of psychological symptoms and disorders to childhood or adult traumatic events many of which involve interpersonal violence As a result a new specialty of mental health practitioners has evolved one specifically concerned with the assessment and treatment of psychological trauma At the same time however the typical front line clinician is bound to encounter children and adults who have been victimized and who present complex post traumatic sequelae It is for both the trauma specialist and the general clinician that this sourcebook was developed Although the subject matter is disturbing growing assessment and treatment technology give us new hope for treating victims of violence This is the 64th issue of the quarterly journal New Directions for Mental Health Services For more information on the series please see the Journals and Periodicals page

The Validation of the Trauma Assessment for Young Children Heidi Lynne Strickler,2011 Young children experience a variety of traumatic experiences ranging from divorce and witnessing family violence to living with parents who have addictive behaviors to experiencing severe illness and injury to experiencing population wide traumas to experiencing physical or sexual abuse or other forms of child maltreatment Young children between the ages of 3 and 7 are in the preoperational stage of cognitive development and consequently process these experiences in a different manner than adults As a result assessment measures need to take this cognitive processing into account and look at the children s views of their experiences Psychosocial development is equally important in the development of assessment instruments since children in this age group are within Erikson s stages of initiative versus guilt and industry versus inferiority so they are beginning to develop their own opinions and representations of the world Assessment instruments also need to communicate with children on their own level which at this age is through play The current study developed an assessment instrument of trauma symptoms in young children based on a combination of the American Psychiatric Association s diagnostic criteria for Post Traumatic Stress Disorder PTSD recommendations for alternative diagnostic criteria for PTSD in preschool children and theoretical literature related to complex trauma and developmental trauma disorder in young children The Trauma Assessment for Young Children was tested in a control sample of children from an area Head Start Center and a designated trauma sample from children s advocacy centers and domestic violence shelters The purpose of the study was to validate the Trauma Assessment for Young Children The Trauma Assessment for Young Children had good test retest reliability The measure was found to have moderate internal consistency on both the child report and caregiver report versions with higher levels in the caregiver report The Trauma Assessment for Young Children had good convergent validity with the with the Trauma Symptom Checklist for Young Children s PTSD subscale It demonstrated good discriminant validity with the Child Behavior Checklist s externalizing subscales attention aggression and total externalizing Finally the Trauma Assessment for Young Children demonstrated known groups validity on the caregiver report version of the measure indicating that it has the ability to differentiate between the children who have and have not experienced trauma These results are promising for the future utility of the measure with children who have experienced a trauma however the sample size was small therefore implications for future research are discussed as well as implications for social work policy and practice
