Perilous Journey Patricia Sutherland, 2003. A powerful life affirming true story begins like a fairy tale: come true when attractive, assertive and well educated Patty Sutherland meets a handsome prince from Malaysia and they fall in love. At his insistence, Patty converts to the Muslim faith so they can marry. They settle on an idyllic island resort he owns in the South China Sea. Soon their happiness is enhanced by the birth of a daughter and later a son. But as time passes, Patty begins to see another dimension of the man and the family into which she married: they are violent, amoral and involved with the Muslim extremist group which consorts in secret to bring down the West. Realizing she and her children have to get away, Patty tells her husband the marriage is over. Immediately he snatches the children's passports and demands Patty leave the country alone or he threatens he will have her and the children killed. In the next years as she travels between America and Malaysia trying to get custody, Patty sees that even with the excellent lawyer she has hired, there will be no justice since the all powerful Islamic clergy close to her husband rule the religious court system. Finally, Patty realizes the only way to rescue her children is to smuggle them past the extremists guarding them. And she begins to plan as the story accelerates with chilling momentum: their escape to freedom, a perilous journey. The Morning Star and Free Baptist, 1898. Current, 2001. Vanity Fair, 1922. The Northwestern Miller, 1879.
