

Abstract—A patient who had been treated with intravenous amphotericin B for cryptococcal meningitis was found to have a severe allergic reaction to the drug. The patient's clinical history and laboratory studies were reviewed. A skin test confirmed the diagnosis of amphotericin B hypersensitivity. The patient was successfully treated with corticosteroids.

- It is possible that the findings of this study may be limited by the use of a self-report measure of social support. Future research should investigate the role of social support in the relationship between stress and health outcomes using more objective measures of social support.
