Health care providers across countries are struggling to manage, recruit, and retain new nursing staff. In fact, there has been significant decline in the number of nurses throughout the past 10-15 years, with significant gaps in talent, skills, and knowledge. This is a result of a number of factors, including the aging of the nursing workforce, the decline in the number of nurses entering the profession, and the increasing demand for nurses. In the United States, the nursing workforce is aging, with many nurses retiring and not being replaced. In other countries, the nursing workforce is declining, with fewer nurses entering the profession.
