10. Which is more important to the narrator- the psychological elements or the actual elements she faces?

11. As a reader, do you sympathize with this woman's situation? Is the narrator's madness justified or does another aspect of her delusion?

12. Does her one person best companion, her husband, ultimately understand of her, what if not, what or what combination of factors result in her descent?

13. In the introduction of the story, windows and doors are mentioned. How can we make the connection between these elements of nature and the yellow wallpaper?

14. Consider the primary metaphor of the story. How might readers view the narrator as a woman wallpaper to a separation with it only to finally become trapped behind it--a victim of outward over observation?
