Braungart-Rieker, Laura E. Miller-Graff, Lee T. Gettler, Paul D. Hastings, 2016-07-01 Human beings have the most immature newborn and longest maturational schedule of any animal Only 25% of the adult brain size is developed at full term birth and most of the brain's size and volume is co-constructed by caregivers in the first years of life. As a result, early life experience has long-term effects on physiological and psychological wellbeing. Contexts for Young Child Flourishing uses an evolutionary systems framing to address the conditions and contexts for child development and thriving. Contributors focus on flourishing, optimizing individual physiological, psychological, emotional and communal social community functioning. Converging events make this a key time to reconsider the needs of children and their optimal development in light of increasing understanding of human evolution, the early dynamism of development and how these influence developmental trajectories. There is a great deal of misunderstanding both among researchers and the general public about what human beings need for optimal development. As a result, human nature unnecessarily can be misshaped by policies, practices and beliefs that don't take into account evolved needs. Empirical studies today are better able to document and map the long-term effects of early deficits or early assets, mostly in animal models but also through longitudinal studies. An interdisciplinary set of scholars considers child flourishing in regards to issues of development, childhood experience and wellbeing. Scholars from neuroscience, anthropology and clinical and developmental studies examine the buffering effects of optimal caregiving practices and shed light on the need for new databases, new policies and altered childcare practices. The Child's Curriculum Colwyn Trevarthen, Jonathan Delafield-Butt, Aline-Wendy Dunlop, 2018-08-30. All children are born with emotional talent. But if left untended, those talents can wane during the first five years of life. Children are sensitive and social beings from birth, exhibiting an innate enthusiasm for communication that must be satisfied for healthy development. If their feelings, agency and motivations are met with affection, if they are respected and nurtured, then children will respond creatively and that inherent desire for companionship will flourish. However, with the recent changes in political and educational systems, early years education has seen a decline in focus on the emotional wellbeing of children and the development of their creativity. Those systems need to adapt if educators are to bring out the best in our future generations. By nurturing creativity and emotional wellbeing in the first five years of life, long-term social benefits can be wrought. The book focusses on children's readiness for learning. It addresses the natural joy explicit in children's early conversations and engagement with music and their development through play with both adults and other children. This kind of education allows children to develop their bodies and skills, accept and understand their feelings, build relationships and progress both their imagination and their problem-solving skills. In this way, play with others drives development. With contributors from the fields of psychological, educational and political spheres, this book will be of interest to anyone concerned for the future of our children. Toxic Childhood Sue Palmer, 2015-02-12.
