cultivated or urbanized Indicators of soil condition show that more than half of the grasslands in the study have some degree of soil degradation over 5 percent of these grasslands are strongly to extremely degraded Indicators of grassland biodiversity show marked declines in grassland birds of North America with negative effects from fragmentation and non native species suggested for this region and others Although the carbon storage potential for grasslands is large degraded areas store less carbon and there is heavy burning of some grassland areas especially the African savannas Tourism and recreational activities in grasslands appear to make important economic contributions to some countries with revenues generally increasing Overuse of some areas and declines in wildlife populations however suggest possible declines in the capacity to continue to provide these services
