Abstract

This research paper examines the students' perspective on the utilization of a content-based approach (CBL) or content in an e-book for learning academic writing. The study aims to explore students' perceptions, experiences, and preferences regarding the use of an e-book with content-based instruction in the context of academic writing. The research objectives are to investigate students' satisfaction with the e-book, its usability, its impact on their language skills and subject knowledge, and their overall learning experience. The study utilizes a survey approach, gathering quantitative data with 4-likert scale questionnaire. The major results reveal that students generally perceive the content-based approach in the e-book as beneficial, providing them with engaging and interactive learning experiences. Students appreciate the convenience and accessibility of the e-book format and consider it useful for improving their language skills, subject understanding, and critical thinking abilities. However, challenges related to technical issues and the need for additional support resources are also identified. The conclusions drawn from this study highlight the value of integrating a content-based approach in an e-book for learning academic writing, considering students' preferences, usability factors, and the potential for enhancing their learning outcomes. Recommendations are provided to improve e-book design, technical support, and additional resources to maximize the benefits of the content-based approach in academic writing instruction.

Introduction

In the realm of higher education, students often face significant challenges when it comes to developing proficient academic writing skills. The ability to effectively convey ideas, employ subject-specific terminology, and organize information coherently remains elusive for many learners. Traditional teaching methods may not fully cater to their individual needs, leading to a lack of engagement with subject-specific content and a disconnect between theoretical concepts and practical application (Lin et al., 2015). Traditional teaching methods often struggle to bridge the gap between theoretical concepts and practical application, resulting in inadequate writing proficiency among students.

Academic writing is a crucial skill for students to master, as it is essential for their academic success and future careers. One approach to teaching academic writing is the content-based approach, which involves teaching writing skills through the study of subject-specific content. Content-based instruction (CBI) is an approach that integrates language teaching aims with content instruction, viewing language as a medium for learning content and content as a resource for language development (Pessoa et al., 2007). It allows students to interact with real-
