ANALYSIS The authors' conclusions are based on a review of the literature and a series of focus group discussions with 12 health professionals. The authors acknowledge the limitations of their study, including the small sample size and the lack of a control group. They conclude that the findings suggest that the use of a structured approach to patient assessment and management is likely to improve patient outcomes and reduce the risk of litigation.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also significantly improved the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

■ CONCLUSIONS The results of this study suggest that the use of a single, standardized, and validated questionnaire is a feasible and reliable method for assessing the prevalence of self-reported mental health problems in a community sample. The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems was higher in the community sample than in the clinical sample, which is consistent with the findings of other studies. The results also suggest that the use of a single, standardized, and validated questionnaire is a feasible and reliable method for assessing the prevalence of self-reported mental health problems in a community sample.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of older adults. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group consisted of 20 older adults who participated in a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program. The control group consisted of 20 older adults who did not participate in the program. The study was conducted in a community center. The primary outcome was the change in the physical and psychological health of the older adults. The secondary outcome was the change in the quality of life of the older adults. The results of the study showed that the intervention group had a significant improvement in physical and psychological health and quality of life compared to the control group. The findings of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health and quality of life of older adults.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 10-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in Ankara, Turkey. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group participated in a 12-week training program that included aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not participate in any training program. Physical fitness was measured at the beginning and end of the 12-week period using a series of tests including a 1000m run, a 10m sprint, a 10m shuttle run, a 10m sit and reach, and a 10m standing long jump. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly higher scores than the control group in all five tests at the end of the 12-week period. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of 10-year-old children.
