Nares ... and the Late Captain Frank Tourle Thomson, R.N. Great Britain. Challenger Office,Great Britain. Admiralty,1887 The results of an expedition funded by the British Admiralty and the Royal Society with the scientific objectives To investigate the physical conditions of the deep sea in the great ocean basins as far as the neighborhood of the Great Southern Ice Barrier in regard to depth temperature circulation specific gravity and penetration of light To determine the chemical composition of seawater at various depths from the surface to the bottom the organic matter in solution and the particles in suspension To ascertain the physical and chemical character of deep sea deposits and the sources of these deposits and To investigate the distribution of organic life at different depths and on the deep seafloor The Voyage of the Challenger Charles Wyville Thomson,General Books,2012-05 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher Not indexed Not illustrated 1877 Excerpt of Stanley the present seat of government of the Falkland Islands At a first glance these islands are not attractive and I doubt if they improve greatly on acquaintance The land is generally low and flat but it rises here and there into ridges the highest a little over 2 000 feet in height The ground is dark in colour a mixture of brown and dull green the ridges are pale grey with lines of outcrop of hard white quartzite like dilapidated stone walls at different levels along the strike The vegetation is scanty and what little there is very ineffective There is nothing of higher dignity than a herb the nearest approach to a shrub being a rank form of groundsel Senecio candicans with large button like yellow flowers and very white woolly foliage which runs up along the shore and in sheltered nooks inland to a height of two or three feet and a pretty Veronica V decitssata which is however indigenous on the west island only and is introduced in the gardens about Port Stanley Above Stanley Harbour the land slopes up for a hundred feet or so to a low ridge beyond which what is called there the Camp champ extends nearly level for many miles with slightly raised stretches of pasture and wide patches of peat and dark boggy tarns The little town of Stanley is built along the shore and stretches a little way up the slope It is built mainly of square white grey slated houses and puts one greatly in mind of one of the newer small towns in the Scottish West Highlands or in one of the Hebrides The resemblance is heightened by the smell of peat smoke for peat is almost universally burned as there is no wood and coal costs 3 a ton The Government House is very like a Shetland or Orkney manse stone built slated and grey without Report on the Scientific Results of the Voyage of H.M.S.
