A black and white photograph of a vintage electronic calculator, likely a Sharp EL-501. The device is rectangular with a dark, possibly black, casing. The keypad is visible, featuring a grid of small, light-colored buttons. On the right side of the keypad, there are several larger, more prominent buttons, including what appears to be a power button and some function keys. The display area is located at the top of the device, showing a series of small, rectangular segments. The overall appearance is that of a classic, functional electronic instrument from the late 20th century.
