Clinical Surveillance The Actionable Benefits of Objective Medical Device Data for Crucial Decision Making focuses on the use of objective continuously collected medical device data for the purpose of identifying patient deterioration with a primary focus on those data normally obtained from both the higher acuity care settings in intensive care units and the lower acuity settings of general care wards It includes examples of conditions that demonstrate earlier signs of deterioration including systemic inflammatory response syndrome opioid induced respiratory depression shock induced by systemic failure and more The book provides education on how to use these data such as for clinical interventions in order to identify examples of how to guide care using automated durable medical device data from higher and lower acuity care settings The book also includes real world examples of applications that are of high value to clinical end users and health systems
