Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical and psychological health of the subjects was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also significantly improved the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

QUESTION A 60-year-old male with a 10-year history of type 2 diabetes mellitus presents with a 2-week history of increasing fatigue, weight loss, and decreased appetite. He reports frequent urination and increased thirst. His medical history is significant for hypertension, hyperlipidemia, and chronic kidney disease (stage 3). He is currently taking metformin, lisinopril, and atorvastatin. Physical examination reveals mild dehydration, tachycardia, and normal blood pressure. Laboratory studies show hemoglobin A1c of 10.5%, serum glucose of 250 mg/dL, and serum bicarbonate of 18 mEq/L. Urinalysis shows glucose, ketones, and a positive nitroprusside test. What is the most likely diagnosis?

ANSWER A. Diabetic ketoacidosis
B. Hyperosmolar hyperglycemic state
C. Diabetic neuropathy
D. Diabetic retinopathy

EXPLANATION The patient's symptoms and laboratory findings are consistent with diabetic ketoacidosis (DKA). The presence of hyperglycemia, ketonuria, and metabolic acidosis (low bicarbonate) are key features of DKA. The patient's history of type 2 diabetes and current medications (metformin, lisinopril, atorvastatin) do not rule out DKA. The physical examination findings of mild dehydration and tachycardia are also consistent with DKA. The other options are less likely given the patient's symptoms and laboratory findings.
