

Writing Up Qualitative Research

James W. Drisko

What makes a good qualitative research report? There is no simple answer as qualitative research is not a single, unified tradition (Riessman, 1994). Qualitative research includes a wide range of philosophies, research purposes, intended audiences, methods, and reporting styles (Denzin & Lincoln, 1994; Drisko, 1997; Greene, 1994). This wide range of legitimate purposes is simultaneously a source of strength and a source of confusion. Yet the qualitative research report must always tell the story of the project, richly convey the views of others, and detail implications. To help guide researchers, this article provides some orientation regarding writing up qualitative research. First, some general issues are addressed. Next, three key areas that undermine the overall quality of qualitative research reports are identified. Finally, an outline of areas to consider is offered with more specific suggestions for qualitative researchers as authors.

As Caputo (2004) points out, a manuscript for publication is the culmination of one's work. All that was learned is revised, trimmed, and synthesized to be useful to a selected audience. The manuscript must be focused to make the purposes, method, and findings both accessible and appealing to others while conforming to the guidelines of the journal or volume to which it is submitted. Clarity, thoroughness, and writing style all matter. "Providing a road map" for readers or "telling the story" of the research and its yield are fine metaphors which emphasize the goal of informing others.

While some scholars of qualitative research advocate for widely varied, even experimental, reporting styles, this paper focuses on issues represented in the contemporary professional social work literature. Authors should innovate to convey knowledge and process through their writing, yet expectations of editorial reviewers and readers often force a more traditional approach.

Key Concerns: Clearly Stating the Study Question

It may seem obvious, but stating the research question clearly is where the research report starts. Researchers must select and state the topic of focus for this specific manuscript. Other parts of the story may be told elsewhere at other times and for other purposes. Often the research question can be reshaped into the manuscript title. In qualitative research, study questions may be quite broad, for example, "How do social work practitioners evaluate their practice efforts?" Once the question is stated, it should orient the manuscript and not vary within the manuscript. Oddly, in many manuscripts I review, authors alter the study question as it is restated between the introduction and methodology, and again in the discussion. This can be unsettling or bewildering for the reader. It seems that the author has not really understood the purpose of the report (or worse, of the research). It is true that new knowledge and insight is often gained during the course of qualitative research. This may cause the researcher's area of interest to change while doing the research. Yet once the research is completed and the manuscript is prepared, the reader is best oriented by a clear and consistent statement of the study question. Key aspects or dimensions of the study question can serve as headings or subheadings within the report to guide both the researcher/author and the reader.

An Orienting Literature Review

Research questions both direct our attention and shape how we think about the topic under study. The literature review helps the reader understand key aspects of the conceptual and empirical foundations of the study. Sometimes limitations in prior conceptual work motivate qualitative studies. Prior conceptualization may be limited, lacking in relevance to the issue or population of interest, or may be

Writing Organization Carl Rhodes, 2001-01-01 Carl Rhodes examines the implicit power of writing and authorship that is at play when people and organisations are re presented in research To explore this the book reports a research project in the area of organisational storytelling that investigates how people in one organisation used stories to re present their own learning experiences from the implementation of a quality management program This research is written in three principal genres autobiography ethnography and a fictional short story These re presentational strategies are reviewed to examine how different genres effect authority in different ways Drawing extensively on the work of Mikhail Bakhtin and on writers associated with postmodernism and poststructuralism the book offers a challenging discussion of what organisational research might be when the notion of the equivalence of reality and representation is radically questioned
