Abstract

Background Trauma centers are associated with improved survival rates and outcomes in trauma patients. In 2000 our hospital officially became a level I trauma center. The implementation of the trauma center model showed a significant reduction in mortality and hospital length of stay in our hospital and throughout the trauma region. The aim of the present prospective database study was to present the outcomes of patients treated during the course of further maturation of a level I trauma center.

Methods We performed the prospective database study and included and analyzed outcome data for all adult trauma patients admitted to our trauma center during the years 2003 through 2006 (period 1) and 2007 through 2010 (period 2).

Results A total of 5,299 patients were included; 2,419 in period 1 and 2,880 in period 2. Mean Injury Severity Score (ISS) increased from 12.6 to 13.8 ($p < 0.001$). Mean Revised Trauma Score decreased from 7.4 to 7.2 ($p < 0.001$). Penetrating injuries increased from 111 (4.6 %) to 192 (6.7 %) ($p < 0.001$). More head injuries (+7.2 %) and spine injuries (+3.1 %), and fewer injuries to extremities (−6.5 %) were seen in the second period. Mortality, adjusted for age and ISS, was lower in period 2 (odds ratio [OR]: 0.736, $p = 0.010$). Adjusted for age, ISS, and survival, both the hospital stay and the intensive care unit stay were shortened (OR: 1.068, $p < 0.018$; OR:

1.188, $p = 0.007$). Mean probability of survival was significantly higher in the second period. Moreover, more unexpected survivors were seen in the second period (Z-score of 3.4 and W-value of 1.46).

Conclusions Maturation of the trauma center and the trauma system resulted in improved patient outcomes. A significant increase in unexpected survivors was noted, and shorter hospital stay and ICU stay were achieved. Of note, population-based studies on trauma system and trauma center performance with statistical analysis by logistic regression are considered strong class III evidence.

Introduction

Trauma is the leading cause of death and disability worldwide and is becoming an increasing health problem throughout the world [1, 2]. It is of great importance to improve the quality of trauma care and thereby improve outcomes in trauma patients. Consequently, major transformations were established in Dutch trauma care, leading to the institution of a regionalized inclusive trauma system in the Netherlands, which became official in 1999 [3–5]. At present, there are 11 trauma regions nationwide, each surrounding a level I trauma center. All other hospitals located in the same region are designated level II or III trauma centers [6]. In 2000, the University Medical Center of Utrecht (UMCU) officially became a level I trauma center [5]. Twelve regional hospitals are part of the same network. The study from our group demonstrated improved outcome in trauma patients after implementation of a level I trauma center in the Netherlands [7]. Mortality rates were reduced (odds ratio [OR]: 0.606, $p < 0.05$), hospital stay was shortened, and the number of intensive care unit (ICU) admissions decreased.
