It challenges the standard concept of the Scots as an ancient nation whose British identity only emerged in the early modern era. Three Dimensional Digital-computer Model of the Ferron Sandstone Aquifer Near Emery, Utah Daniel J. Morrissey, Gregory C. Lines, Scott D. Bartholoma, 1980 A three dimensional finite difference computer model of the Ferron sandstone aquifer was used to simulate groundwater flow in the Emery coal field in east central Utah. The model also was used to predict the effects of proposed surface mining and the resulting mine dewatering on potentiometric surfaces of the aquifer. The model was calibrated in a steady state simulation using water levels and manmade discharges from the aquifer that were observed during 1979. Too few data were available to verify the calibrated model in a transient state simulation with historical aquifer response to manmade discharges. Predictions made with the model are considered to be semiquantitative. Discharge from the proposed surface mine was predicted to average 0.3 cubic foot per second through 15 years of operation. Drawdowns of 5 feet in the potentiometric surface of the aquifer were predicted to extend as much as 3 miles from the proposed mine after 15 years of operation. Historical lectures on the life of ...
