Relationships of Positive and Negative Affect to Coping and Functional Outcomes in Systemic Sclerosis Ingunn Hansdottir,2002 A vast literature has shown that chronic illness has a negative impact on emotional adjustment To date conceptual models guiding this research have focused on negative emotions and psychopathology However most people with chronic illness do not meet criteria for a diagnosable disorder suggesting that our focus should be on normal emotional processes instead Based on the two dimensional model of emotion proposed by Watson and Tellegen 1985 which suggests two distinct factors of emotion positive affect PA and negative affect NA the present study extended previous research by examining the role of both PA and NA in adjustment to chronic illness It was hypothesized that PA and NA would represent distinct aspects of emotional well being with separate influences on factors related to adjustment to chronic illness Participants were 96 patients with confirmed diagnoses of Systemic Sclerosis a severe and chronic rheumatic disease As part of a larger longitudinal study participants completed self report measures assessing PA and NA Positive and Negative Affective Schedule PANAS coping Revised Ways of Coping Checklist and functional outcomes pain and disability measured with the Health Assessment Questionnaire Confirmatory factor analysis indicated that PA and NA constituted separate negatively correlated factors The utility of assessing both PA and NA was further supported by differential relationships of PA and NA to coping and functional outcomes Hierarchical regression analysis showed that relations among coping affect and functional outcomes were consistent with a mediational model in which affect was found to mediate the association between coping and functional outcomes after controlling for disease severity Adaptive coping was associated with higher PA and PA was related to better functional outcomes i e lower levels of pain and disability Maladaptive coping was associated with higher NA and NA was related to higher levels of pain Using a latent structural equation modeling approach the mediational model yielded a marginally acceptable fit to the data Implications suggest the importance of assessing both PA and NA in order to fully understand the process of adjusting to chronic illness as well as to identify mechanisms that lead to improved

valuable resource for upper division undergraduate and graduate students in clinical psychology as well as for researchers doctoral students clinicians and instructors in the areas of developmental psychopathology clinical psychology experimental psychopathology psychiatry counseling psychology and school psychology Links Between Peer Victimization and Childhood and Adolescent Depression Kathleen Erin Woods,2006 Journal of Personality ,2003 Canadian Journal of Counselling ,2006 A Cognitive Vulnerability Model of Depression for People with Temporal Lobe Epilepsy Eun-Jeong Lee,2007 Codeveloping Trajectories of Antisocial Behavior, Alcohol Use, Depression, and Anxiety During Adolescence Shannon Jean Dogan,2009 Antisocial behavior alcohol use depression and anxiety are the most common problems experienced by adolescents It is well established that the majority of youth who experience one of these problems are more likely than not to experience a subsequent problem Adolescents who experience multiple problems have the poorest outcomes and experience difficulties in multiple domains such as school family peers and work The occurrence and consequences of multiple problem youth are so great that much research has been devoted to this topic Despite this attention most research has focused on disorder rather than symptomology and there are many inconsistencies limitations and gaps in the literature Understanding these linkages at the symptom level is crucial to interrupting this sequence The present study uses a prospective longitudinal design and multiple group second order parallel process latent growth curve modeling to examine the relations between the developmental trajectories of antisocial behavior alcohol use depression and anxiety symptomology across adolescence and their interrelations a first of its kind Each outcome was assessed using multiple measures at four time points over a 5 year period in a sample of 451 young adolescents beginning in the 8 th grade age M 14 08 SD 0 42 In line with previous research a significant association was found among all the symptom domains studied However fewer longitudinal relations were found between the different emotional and behavioral problems than previous research suggests The results of this study clearly show that conduct problems are a risk factor for increases in depression and anxiety And anxiety was a strong indicator of subsequent problems with depression There was no evidence that either antisocial behavior or alcohol use influenced the trajectory of the other Theoretical explanations for these associations are reviewed The present study sheds new light on the codeveloping trajectories of four problems commonly experienced by adolescents The findings of this study can help aid preventive efforts because symptoms of one disorder can be used to identify and intervene with populations at risk for symptoms of a secondary disorder With this knowledge these efforts have the potential to greatly reduce costs to human life and society Textbook in Psychiatric Epidemiology Ming T. Tsuang,Mauricio Tohen,2002-09-09 The new edition of this critically praised text continues to provide the most comprehensive overview of the concepts methods and research advances in the field It has been revised and enhanced to capitalize on the strengths of the first edition while keeping it up to date in the field of psychiatry This comprehensive publication now includes new chapters on child psychiatry community studies and perinatal studies Highs & Lows
