

Supervisory Relationship

In the counseling relationship, the growth and welfare of the client is the primary concern. Similarly, in the supervisory relationship, the professional growth and welfare of the counselor is a major concern. However, while focusing on the counselor's growth, this must be balanced with the protection of the client.

The Supervisory Relationship The Supervisory Relationship:

Effective Supervisory Relationships Helen Beinart, Susan Clohessy, 2017-03-14 Effective Supervisory Relationships Best Evidence and Practice is the first book to explore in detail the Supervisory Relationship which research has consistently found to be the most critical component of any supervisory process Helen Beinart and Sue Clohessy two experts in the field draw on world wide studies that cover all major therapeutic approaches to the Supervisory Relationship and include detailed coverage of cultural competence and issues of effective multicultural supervision The result is a comprehensive resource that offers cutting edge internationally relevant information in order to inform study training continuing professional development and practice

The Supervisory Relationship Tamara L. Kaiser, 1992 The Supervisory Relationship Judith M. Paskiewicz, 1993 Abstract Clinical supervision is fundamental to the teaching of psychotherapy and is a primary means by which practicing psychologists examine their clinical work and enhance their skills A search of the literature reveals that little research has focused on the supervisory relationship especially how the relationship is experienced by the supervisor This is a phenomenological study that asks the question How does the clinical supervisor experience the supervisory relationship Open ended interviews were conducted with ten Ph D psychologists each with at least two years of experience as supervisors Transcripts of the interview material were analyzed with the processes of Phenomenological Reduction and Eidetic Variation culminating in a final Textural Structural Synthesis This study finds that supervisors highly value their supervisory relationships They find them enjoyable enriching and a way of making a meaningful contribution both to the profession of psychology and to the practice of psychotherapy Supervisors are cautious and somewhat burdened by the responsibility they take on especially the legal liability They feel protective of the clients of the supervisee and of the supervisees themselves Supervisors see themselves as teacher mentor and supportive facilitator of the supervisee s effectiveness They enjoy the relationship for the opportunity it brings to enter into an intense creative process that improves their own skills as well as those of the supervisee They work to create a supervisory relationship that provides an important supportive space in which the supervisee can explore and learn The relationship deepens over time bringing increased comfort openness and friendship When a sense of mutuality is not achieved the relationship dulls and an air of tolerance prevails When supervision flourishes the supervisor comes to regard the supervisee as a peer In this apprenticeship process supervisors become part of a professional heritage they value Limitations of this study and implications for training and practice are discussed

The Supervisory Relationship Mary Gail Frawley-O'Dea, Joan E. Sarnat, 2001-01-01 The first volume to elaborate a comprehensive contemporary model of supervision Using a wealth of example and vignettes the authors show how working within the parameters of the supervisory relationship can allow the supervisee to gain a deeper understanding of the treatment method being taught An ideal source for psychologists psychiatrists social workers and psychoanalysts anticipate the workplace issues they may face and provides them with valuable insights about what really goes on in the supervisory relationship Because such a range of real life situations are presented readers reap the benefit of being confronted with workplace situations it might take them years to run across The diverse vignettes drawn from clinical practice in a variety of settings lend a powerful dynamic to this practical book and provide a departure point for discussion or even debate about sensitive issues The Supervisory Relationship Mary Gail Frawley-O'Dea, Joan E. Sarnat, 2012-02-21

In the past two decades many psychodynamic therapists have begun to view the relational processes taking place between patient and therapist as a central source of transformation Yet traditional paradigms of clinical supervision focusing primarily on didactic teaching have limitations for training therapists to work in these new ways This groundbreaking volume is the first to elaborate a comprehensive contemporary model of supervision Using a wealth of examples and vignettes the authors show how working within the vicissitudes of the supervisory relationship can allow the supervisee to gain a deeper understanding of the treatment method being taught Key topics discussed include issues of power and authority regression in the supervisory relationship rethinking the teach treat question parallel process as a relational phenomenon working with group process in case conference and the role of the organization in supporting training This is a richly informative resource for psychologists psychiatrists social workers psychoanalysts and others involved in clinical supervision and training It also will serve as a text for courses in supervision and organizational psychology Effective Supervisory Relationships Helen

Strongly Bonded Supervisory Relationships Melissa T. Heinrich, 2018 The current study explores the bond aspect of the supervisory working alliance through the lens of relational cultural theory RCT Previous research posits a quality supervisory relationship is important for effective supervision and clinical outcomes The Supervisory Working Alliance SWA Bordin 1983 is a pan theoretical model for the growth process in supervision including a mutual agreement on goals for supervision b mutual agreement on associated tasks for accomplishing the goals and c the emotional bond in the supervisory relationship The process for mutual agreement of goals and tasks seems clear the bond aspect of the SWA seems less clear Research concerning supervisees perspectives on quality supervisory relationships describes supervisor behaviors or demeanor leaving gaps in the literature for a clear description of the bond aspect of the SWA The primary purpose of the current study is to add a clearer description of the bond aspect of the SWA by exploring strongly bonded supervisory relationships from supervisees perspectives through the lens of RCT RCT is a counseling theory that posits growth and change happen through connection with others Jordan 2010 The current study utilizes an interpretative phenomenological analysis method of qualitative inquiry Smith Flowers Larkin 2009 Participants included nine pre doctoral interns from accredited university counseling centers who acknowledged having a previous or current strongly bonded supervisory relationship and received multicultural training in their program or internship site Participants provided two interviews either face to face or over Zoom video conferencing Analysis resulted in discovery of six themes Intimacy in the Supervisory Relationship Supervisor Guided Supervisee Development Cultural Attunement Supervisor Way of Engaging Supervisor Integrity and Positive Outcomes Intimacy in the Supervisory Relationship was discovered as a core theme as it set strongly bonded supervisory relationships apart from other supervisory relationships It is possible Intimacy in the Supervisory Relationship is the difference between strongly bonded and good supervisory relationships The results also support RCT as a potentially effective approach to supervision due to the overlap between the themes of this study descriptions of quality supervisory relationships in the literature and core theory tenets Finally the results reflected and extended research that suggests the importance of supervisors multicultural competence in quality supervision Results of the current study suggest direct and on going multicultural dialogue initiated by the supervisor is additive to strongly bonded supervisory relationships and in some instances integral to the initiation of the strong bond The findings of the current study have particular relevance for the practice of supervision and the training of future supervisors The results of the current study suggest the importance for supervisors and supervisors in training to have strong relational skills and on going development of multicultural competence specifically quality skills for initiating and maintaining multicultural dialogue Quality supervisory experiences support supervision outcomes which are vital for producing quality clinicians and quality clinical outcomes Adding clarity to the bond aspect of the supervisory working alliance increases opportunities for quality supervision and clinical outcomes

A Contemporary Approach to Clinical Supervision Liat Shklarski, Allison Abrams, 2021-07-11 The most critical and influential relationship affecting one's growth as a mental health professional is the relationship between the clinician and the supervisor Good supervisors breed good therapists This book goes beyond facts and figures to provide an innovative perspective on the supervision process Through contributions by seven supervisees and the supervisor they all shared readers are offered a rare glimpse into what takes place during the supervision hour This book not only offers insight into the elements integral to effective supervision but also teaches about the supervisory relationship With contributors from various disciplines theoretical orientations and cultures it shows how the supervisee and supervisor are able to navigate these differences while still gaining the most from supervision Topics that are covered include cultural competence in multicultural supervision and remote supervision when it is conducted between clinicians in different countries as well as an original study by the authors on the experiences of supervisees during the global Covid 19 pandemic and the transition to remote supervision For mental health professionals who are training to be supervisors or experienced supervisors looking to improve their skills this book will serve as an invaluable resource for professional development

Evaluating the Relationship Between Supervisor Self-efficacy and Competence and the Supervisory Relationship Henry Michael Bruns, 2020 The practice of supervision has several implications for the future of mental health Despite these implications and a recent movement towards competency based supervision little research has been done on the construct of competency in supervision This may be partially related to a lack of consensus as to what defines competency in supervision Nevertheless within the supervisory relationship a supervisee's perception that the supervisor is competent plays a role in the quality of the supervisory relationship. Additionally, it is hypothesized that a supervisor's self-efficacy serves as a precursor for competency, indicating that a supervisor's self-efficacy may influence their competence and thereby influence the quality of the supervisory relationship. Given the lack of research regarding a supervisor's self-efficacy, supervisor competence, and the supervisory relationship, this study examined the relationship between supervisor self-efficacy, supervisor competence, and the supervisory relationship. The results suggested that there was not a statistically significant correlation between supervisor self-efficacy and the supervisory relationship. This study also examined the correlation between supervisor competence and the supervisory relationship, finding a strong statistically significant correlation between both variables. Finally, it was hypothesized that a supervisor's competence would significantly mediate the relationship between a supervisor's self-efficacy and the supervisory relationship. The results indicated that there was no interaction between self-efficacy and the supervisory relationship when supervisor competence served as a mediator. Counselor Supervision Nicholas Ladany, Loretta J.

Bradley, 2011-01-19 This new edition of Counseling Supervision is intended for counselor educators, counselor supervisor practitioners, and supervisors in training in a variety of educational and mental health settings. The editors have brought together experts in the field of counselor education to review and examine primary supervision theories and their application to the issues that counselor supervisors will encounter. Special topic areas included are multicultural issues in counselor supervision, the supervisory relationship, an essential and sometimes forgotten component of supervision and its influence on supervision process and outcome, supervision of career counselor trainees, supervision of school counselors, supervision of family and group counselors, group supervision, understanding and conducting research in counselor supervision and training, ethical and advocacy issues in supervision and supervisor training. The authors include numerous case examples throughout the text in order to illustrate the application of theory to practical issues that the counselor supervisors encounter. All chapters in this edition have been revised and updated, and new chapters have been added that expand on areas of supervision that are highly relevant to students, researchers, and practitioners.
