Wolf on the Prowl Ian Jeffries, 2015-12-04 WOLF ON THE Prowl covers the period since July 2007 Earlier political and economic developments in Mongolia by Ian Jeffries are to be found in A Guide to the Socialist Economies London Routledge 1990 Socialist Economies and the Transition to the Market London Routledge 1993 A Guide to the Economies in Transition London Routledge 1996 Economies in Transition A Guide to China Cuba Mongolia North Korea and Vietnam at the Turn of the Twenty First Century London Routledge 2001 Mongolia A Guide to Economic and Political Developments London Routledge 2007 Alan Jarvis of Routledge has given permission for this new book to be published by Amazon A word constraint per volume means that the Wolf on the Prowl is divided into two parts Part 1 covers the following topic history and geography political developments from 1924 to the early post communist period demographic religious and cultural background diplomatic developments Press Freedom Index embalming of communist leaders flags of convenience climate change naleds bird avian flu and swine flu a chronology of political developments since July 2007 Part 2 covers economic developments South Korean economic model privatization foreign trade foreign direct investment volume developments foreign aid agriculture economic performance including growth inflation unemployment poverty and the grey economy postscript bibliography index Vital global topics are covered in Wolf on the Prowl including the so called resource curse and how the spoils of vast natural resources are to be divided up between national states and international mining companies In particular the dispute between Mongolia and Rio Tinto is fully covered National Review ,1911 Mongolia Alan J. K. Sanders, 1987 General study politics economy and society Mongolia geographical aspects historical background political developments the political system social structure ethnic groups population trends the economic system agricultural sector religious freedom educational policy cultural policy science policy the armed forces foreign policy role of USSR role of China Bibliography statistical tables Politics and Literature in Mongolia (1921-1948) Simon Wickhamsmith, 2025-10-01 Politics and Literature in Mongolia 1921 1948 investigates the relationship between literature and politics during Mongolia s early revolutionary period Between the 1921 socialist revolution and the first Writers Congress held in April 1948 the literary community constituted a key resource in the formation and implementation of policy At the same time debates within the party discontent among the population and questions of religion and tradition led to personal and ideological conflict among the intelligentsia and in many cases to trials and executions Using primary texts many of them translated into English for the first time Simon Wickhamsmith shows the role played by the literary arts poetry fiction and drama in the complex development of the new society helping to bring Mongolia s nomadic herding population into the utopia of equality industrial progress and social well being promised by the Mongolian People s Revolutionary Party Does Everyone Want Democracy? Paula L. W. Sabloff, 2013-04-30 This book challenges the conventional wisdom that democracy is a universal desire offering a model case study of Mongolian democratization that ties culture history and values to the study of political systems Moral Economic Transitions in the Mongolian Borderlands Hedwig Amelia Waters, 2023-06 A nuanced exploration of the effects of the transition to market democracy in Mongolia's remotest areas In the early 1990s Mongolia began a transition from socialism to a market democracy In the process the country became more than ever dependent on international mining revenue Nearly thirty years later many of Mongolia's poor and rural feel that rather than share in the prosperity the transition was supposed to spread they have been forgotten Moral Economic Transitions in the Mongolian Borderlands analyzes this period of change from the viewpoint of the rural township of Magtaal on the Chinese border After the end of socialism the population of this resource rich area found itself without employment or state institutions yet surrounded by lush nature and mere kilometers from the voracious Chinese market A two tiered resource extractive political economic system developed At the same time as large scale formal legally sanctioned conglomerates arrived to extract oil and other resources local residents grew increasingly dependent on the Chinese funded informal illegal cross border wildlife trade More than a story about rampant capitalist extraction in the resource frontier this book intimately details the complex inner worlds moral ambiguities and emergent collective politics constructed by individuals who feel caught in political economic shifts that are largely outside of their control Contesting Development and Globalization in Mongolia Sarah Combellick-Bidney, 2009 Outside observers seldom dispute that people in developing countries disproportionately bear the adverse effects of globalization but they tend to use the terms winners and losers as static passive and uncritical designations How do those who live in so called developing societies find agency in the global processes in which they supposedly lose In this dissertation I use discourse analysis to explore Mongolian experiences of development and globalization using original interviews with forty Mongolian citizens active in politics and civil society in 2007 along with Mongolian print and broadcast media from the same time period I first relate the narratives of four individuals positioned differently in their society a businessman a doctor a grant writer and an activist to reveal the lived experiences of development and globalization the social economic political and environmental changes that affect people's bodies and minds give shape to their views and motivate them to act I then conduct a broader synthetic analysis of these and other citizens perspectives with regard to the mining controversy that currently dominates Mongolian politics Treating development as a site of contestation rather than a set of depoliticized policy goals with predetermined winners and losers I illustrate the ways in which globalization and development reshape civil society and reconfigure social movements both within Mongolia and beyond its borders Mongolian citizens engage in everyday struggles to affect the future of their society On a daily basis they leverage their gendered socio culturally embedded experiences of inequality to contest the uses of Mongolia's land and resources the scope of its development policies and its geopolitical position with regard to powerful outsiders
