

Sensory Poems

Touching Hand Poems

Recreate on paper or the chalkboard the hand poem to the right. Read the poem with the students. Provide each student with a sheet of white construction paper or index paper. Have the students trace their hands on the construction paper with their fingers wide apart. Ask students to think of something special that their hands do such as wave, "hello" in friendship, paint a beautiful picture, help them to climb a tree or play a sport, etc.

Next, have each student write a poem about his or her hand around the inside edges of the hand outline. Cut out the hand shapes. Display the hand poems along a classroom wall so that one hand touches another to form a border of "Touching Hand Poems."

Inside, Outside Sense Poems

Find a few poems that are rich in perceptual detail. After you read the poems to the class, have students discuss how each sense is used in the poems. Ask students to write poems based on their senses, using as the subject things that they hear, smell, taste, touch, and see inside the classroom, house, etc. Use the following "Inside Poem" example to demonstrate a sense poem.

Inside Poem

Inside, I hear the thud of my brother's feet.
Inside, the smell of pizza floats across my desk.
Inside, I taste the sweetness of my gum.
Inside, I run my hand across my paper.
Inside, I see my mother going down the hall.

Read the poem and discuss how a different sense is introduced on each line. Have students write a few inside poems. Challenge them to write the poem without using the words "see," "hear," "feel," "touch," "taste," or "smell." When students have written some inside poems, ask them to write outside poems, which express the use of their senses in an outdoor environment.

Assemble the students' sense poems into a class book.
