MUCH false reasoning upon insufficient premises has at times on and off been bestowed upon the subject of the bar and its supposed mysteries Space at command will not allow of a dissertation on this detail of the constitution of the violin A few remarks will perhaps be sufficient for present purposes When violins were first sent forth by their inventor Gasparo da Salo the bar was sometimes omitted possibly in all the earliest ones the strain on the upper table being then slight as compared with that of the present day at others it was very short and weak The substance of the upper table was considerable and much over that which the later and modern makers approve of and thus there was a counter balance At the present time still stronger bars are inserted and very frequently without rule or reason Occasionally a coarse bar will allow of good results as regards the emission of the tone the length and thickness happening to be suitable to the proportions in detail of the instrument A weakness at each end of the bar is an oft recurring cause of bad going with regard to the vibrations From this we may infer that when the bar was first thought of and inserted it was simply with an idea of supporting the part over which the third and fourth strings were stretched and that as the tension of the strings became greater in consequence of the rise in the pitch so the bar had to be increased in strength that is longer and deeper The discovery or unearthing of an old master in its original condition will therefore be followed by the opening
