intellectual endowments he followed the impulse that led him to aim at a higher position in life and went to the then celebrated University of Salzburg in order to study jurisprudence As he did not however at once succeed in procuring employment in this profession he was forced from his straitened means to enter the service of Canon Count Thun as valet Subsequently however his talents and that thorough knowledge of music by which he had already gained some part of his livelihood obtained for him a better position In the year 1743 he was received into the band of the Salzburg cathedral by Archbishop Sigismund and as his capabilities and fame as a violinist increased the same Prince shortly afterwards promoted him to the situation of Hof Composer and leader of the orchestra and in 1762 he was appointed Hof Kapellmeister In 1747 give her instructions in it an inborn and passionate love of this art was soon evident in her little brother of three years old who at once gave tokens of a degree of genius far surpassing all experience and really bordering on the marvellous In his fourth year he could play all sorts of little pieces on the piano He only required half an hour to learn a minuet and one hour for a longer movement and in his fifth year he actually composed some pretty short pieces several of which are still extant
