The Young Acrobat of the Great North American Circus Horatio Alger, 2018-08-13 The Young Acrobat of the Great North American Circus Large Print By Horatio Alger There was great excitement in Smyrna especially among the boys. Barlow's Great American Circus in its triumphal progress from State to State was close at hand and immense yellow posters announcing its arrival were liberally displayed on fences and barns while smaller bills were put up in the post office, the hotel and the principal stores and distributed from house to house. It was the largest circus that had ever visited Smyrna. At least a dozen elephants marched with ponderous steps in its preliminary procession while clowns, acrobats, giants, dwarfs, fat women, cannibals and hairy savages from Thibet and Madagascar were among the strange wonders which were to be seen at each performance for the small sum of fifty cents, children half price. For weeks the young people had been looking forward to the advent of this marvelous aggregation of curiosities and the country papers from farther east had given glowing accounts of the great show which was emphatically pronounced greater and more gorgeous than in any previous year. We are delighted to publish this classic book as part of our extensive Classic Library collection. Many of the books in our collection have been out of print for decades and therefore have not been accessible to the general public.
