Abstract: Psychiatrists should have responsibility for the social consequences of their work and address this responsibility with appropriate interventions in the community and within their clinical roles. We present a personal history.

- Access and management of data will be based upon data rights for those subject countries. Countries may not otherwise have public access to the information they require notwithstanding the country's domestic laws and therefore provided with the capability to use information held at confidential level and used.
- Effective working arrangements should be agreed consistent at least with the OECD Privacy Guidelines (1980) and OECD Guidelines (1990) on data protection.

These data were subsequently used to build systems models that further defined the information system requirements and modeling. Requirements for processing, storage, and retrieval were subsequently defined, developed, and tested. Results of these activities are discussed in the following sections.

- How can we make the business environment more and less competitive? (How can we make other businesses more and less competitive?) (How can we make our business more and less competitive?)

While this research is being replicated in Germany, the first results are promising. The first studies in other areas have to be replicated and extended. Therefore it is necessary to continue with ongoing research, which will result in a high level of research quality.
