

between nation and nation, and, finally, the relationship between [an individual] and his [or her] God.<sup>1</sup>

With church life becoming less formal and more attention being given to relationships within churches, a new day has dawned for the greeter. New trends are emerging as ministers move beyond looking for smiling faces to testing volunteers for their giftedness in the ministry of hospitality. A task that previously was viewed as requiring minimal skill and ability—and even less spiritual orientation or Christian maturity—is now being viewed through the prism of ministry and spiritual gifts.

Your role has emerged as well out of an expansion of ushering. Previously, a smile, a bulletin, and an occasional handshake were thought to be sufficient as ushers stood in the doorways of the sanctuary awaiting the arrival of worshipers. As congregations grew into mega-churches, the onus was upon them to be or become personal and intimate to prevent people from getting lost in the attending crowds. Such crowds overwhelm the capabilities of ushers, and for a growing number of congregations, greeters are being added to their outreach ministries. Perhaps another consideration is that people will and do travel miles to go to the church of their choice rather than the church in proximity. This makes people more of a stranger than they would be in a neighborhood or community church a few blocks away from home.

Front Line, First Impressions

Greeters are “first impression” people. You are the front line for your pastor and your congregation. In the mind of the visitor,
